GEYER'S SCURVY CURE FOR POULTRY was the first article introduced to the public for this purpose, which has been thoroughly tested in the last ten years by many of our brother fanciers who are willing to say with us that there is no other article on the market like this that can be relied on to do its work properly. It is something that the poultry fancier, who appreciates his fine birds, needs very much. What looks more disgraceful than a fine flock of chickens, many, or all of them, having their legs coated with a thick, hard, scabby crust which is called scurvy? It spoils the appearance of the birds and is very annoying to them. It is also contagious. Here we have a sure cure for this ugly disease. By following the directions we guarantee that it will take off that ugly, hard coat and leave the legs clean and smooth and give them their natural color. It also has no equal for healing sores and frosted combs and wattels. It makes them very bright and red. It is just what the exhibitor wants to prepare his birds for the exhibition room. Some of our customers tell us that they have tried it with good results for weak legs. We only ask you to give it a trial. It is put up in tin boxes. Money must accompany all orders. Price, 25 cents. Address, G. A. Geyer, Florin, Pa. 560tf

MONEY MADE

By Using Geyer's Champion Disinfectant & Vermin Destroyer

There are, in all classes of powders before the public, many calculated for the sure cure of lice and vermin and a dozen other purposes, yet are they reliable, and have they produced the results claimed?

In offering this compound, we offer a powder such as is not before the public, and fills a place that none other can for the purpose intended—a positive, sure disinfectant and destroyer of all vermin that invests either poultry, small animals, those of the barn yard.

It is a perfect destroyer of all disease germs, and produces a healthy odor wherever distributed. It is a sure cure for gapes, in young chicks.

If you are skeptical and don't believe in Powders or compouud because of many worthless ones on the market, we ask, please cast aside your prejudice and give this compound a trial. It is put up in 2 pound boxes. Price 25c. 560tf

Show Evolution.

How the Great Hagerstown Poultry Show Was Built Up.

About eighteen years ago, as near as the writer can remember,he was called upon to judge the poultry display at the Hagerstown, Md., Agricultural fair. Up to that time "a committee" had always served, and, of course, with the usual results. The "poultry expert," as he was termed, was given instructions to judge the display "strictly according to regular poultry show methods." There were something less than 200 speciment in pairs and trios in coops. When the returns were handed in there was a sudden "hullabaloo" and there was soon convened a meeting of the executive committee and the judge invited to appear and explain his "slaughter of the innocents"—chickens or officers, he has never found out which was meant. The fact that the president of the association had fowls that were disqualified, and the exhibits of several other notable officials had received the same "dose," had a sort of stunning effect. "Why these disqualified specimens, as you call them," asserted one of the gentlemen present, "won the highest awards under the committee year." The so-called expert simply replied that the superintendent of poultry had his report, which explained in black and white the reasons why the specimens were disqualified. The superintendent was requested to read the report. He did so. One of the officials, after hearing that his entry was disqualified for having "dark blue legs, which should be yellow, and also having feathers on legs," remarked, "Well, I've got the right kind home, but liked the looks of the ones I picked out and sent the best. As far as I am concerned, I shall vote to sustain the awards of the judge." Another, after hearing why his birds were thrown out, remarked, "The lesson is worth money to me, and I am glad we are on the right track." Some still insisted that the judge even things up a little—a la base ball umpire—and give some of the disqualified specimens a premium for appearance sake and the good of the show. The judge then arose and explained the impossibility of complying with such requests, and explained that the birds had been judged strictly on their merits, and that full explanation was given for every disqualified specimen—giving what the disqualification consisted of, and also what the correct requirements were. He said if Hagerstown wanted to build up a first class poultry exhibit the specimen must be judged without fear or favor. This first step was an object-lesson. Better birds would come the next year—every man who has disqualified birds here will heed the lesson and come next year with good ones. The president of the association then came to the rescue of the judge by declaring as he was the worst sufferer by the decisions, he wanted to go on record as saying the judge was right—knew his business—was glad he had put down in black and white his reasons, so that all could learn. He said the judge should be thanked for his good work and determination to stand by what he had done. An unanimous vote sustaining the judge resulted, and he was engaged on "the spot" to come again next year.

MR. JOHN L. COST

The Man That Built Up the Great Poultry Show at Hagerstown, Md.

Nearly 500 birds were in line the next fall and some of them of very good quality.

The increase in exhibits was simply remarkable, as was also the improvement in quality. Rotund John L. turned out with his string of Light Brahmas, and his "good will' for the fair set an example that aroused the home patriotism of every Maryland poultry fancier. Entries began to come from everywhere. Fanciers were hearing of the splendid call their birds received, the grand reception extended all fanciers, the unusual liberality extended by the fair officials—in fact the dispensation of genuine Maryland hospitality. There were no tedious long days of waiting for prize money. The writer may be excused if he owns that he feels proud of his record in helping to build up the Hagerstown show. He stuck to it alone until the entries had increased into thousands, and until the number was so great that he could hardly get through the four days of the show. Then John L. Cost told him to recommend another judge—excuse the vanity—but he said another first class man such as you can recommend. The writer had been doing some judging at several winter shows side by side with "Drev." and recommended him.

Still the fame of the Hagerstown show increased until it gained a national reputation, and was permanently emblazoned on the poultry map of the world.

Quality of exhibits kept space with increasing entries. To-day many of the Hagerstown winners become the prize birds of the leading winter shows.

There is no other fair in the United States that treats poultry fanciers as liberally as Hagerstown; no other fair that gives such detailed attention; none that banquets its exhibitors; none where there is such a real brotherly feeling among the fanciers present. The speeches at the annual banquets are of a high order and some of the "boy orators" astonish with their bursts of oratory.

John L. Cost has great cause to feel proud of the wonderful evolution of Hagerstown poultry show. There is so much good humor and sense in his composition he just has to be big in size to hold it. No matter how great his trials he is always so good natured I feel like borrowing more from him every time I see him.

G. O. BROWN.

CARE OF FOWLS IN MOULT.

The Inland Poultry Journal for the past few months has given its readers timely advice on the hatching and rearing of young chicks. Advice that we are glad to note has been appreciated, as letters of thanks for these articles have been received from all parts of the country. We are now practically out of the hatching season and most of the young stock is, in a measure, out of danger. But there is another danger that confronts the new breeder of as much importance as any one thing in the care of fancy exhibition stock. That is the proper attention to be given the breeding stock during the moulting season. I remember a remark once made by Arthur Sharp, of Taunton, Massachusetts, the well-known Buff Cochin and Buff Orpington breeder. While looking at some old cock birds, some of them in their third year, I complimented Mr. Sharp on their looks and conditions and asked him how he managed to keep them so well. His answer was, "Once a good bird, always a good bird." A good cockerel should be a a good cock, a good pullet should be a good hen. I wonder how many of our best breeders have given this matter the attention it really deserves. How many of you have stopped to think that to win highest honors on an old bird was really more credit to the owner than to win on a cockerel or pullet. That such is the case is clearly proven by the prices asked and received for winning cocks and hens of our leading varieties. There are many reasons for this. One of the most important is the fact that these birds have been tried in the breeding yards and have proved their work, while there is always an uncertainty about a young bird's breeding, no matter how well they may have been bred or the lines of blood in their ancestry. Like begets like only to a certain degree and owing to the peculiar make-up of our thoroughbred fowls we are likely at any time to produce a splendid specimen as an individual that proves a rank failure in transmitting these characteristics to their offspring, and for this reason one can realize the value of an old breeding bird, either male or female, that has transmitted his or her good points to a large number of their get. To maintain the highest average in our breeding birds should be the air of every one who has the interest of better poultry at heart. To so mate our birds to produce not only rare individuals but a large per cent. of choice specimens should be the aim of all, and to do this successfully we must look carefully after our old birds and especially during the most trying time of their life, the moulting season. While on this point I will call attention of the readers to one very important fact and one that many of them may be in ignorance of, that is the conditions under which some birds moult. Some will apparently drop their feathers within a few days and in a very short time be in full dress again, while others with the same feed and attention drag along for a month or more. And it is these birds that are slow in moulting that must be given the closest attention. You will notice by carefully handling them that their skin is hot and feverish and to stroke the new feathers the wrong way causes intense pain. To leave a hen in this condition in a pen with a male bird is not only wrong, but absolutely cruel. You simply ruin her as a show specimen as many off-feathers are almost sure to follow a bruise and if left too long under these conditions she will either die or be injured to the extent of unfitting her for a breeder the next year. To successfully handle old birds during moulting I am going to give some of the methods adopted at Oakland farm by that prince of showmen, Arthur Sharp. As soon as the breeding season is over the males and females are separated. The hens are taken to one small woods pasture where there is a lot of scrubby trees and underbrush and there they are allowed to run at large. They are fed and watered at one place and soon learn to come there for their feed. No perches are provided them and they soon learn to roost comfortably on the ground and in this way they are prevented from bruising their new feathers in trying to fly onto the perches. No shelter is given them but the small shade trees. They are simply camping out in the open air, breathing it night and day, and are absolutely proof from vermin that is always sure to get into our poultry houses during warm weather. As moulting season comes on the natural conditions surrounding them seems to help push off their old coat and take on the new. I have seen at this farm in early September birds that were in fine show condition that had not been inside a show coop or poultry coop for three months.

Male birds that can run together without fighting are yarded in another pasture under same conditions as the hens. The quarrelsome males or those intended for early exhibition are provided for in the following manner: Small houses resembling dog kennels are scattered around over the farm. These houses are small and two men can easily move them from place to place. They have an opening in the end near the ground about the size of a single sash window. There is no door and this opening is never closed. The opening faces to the north and a small run about four feet wide and eight feet long is attached to the house. The inside of the house is filled up about six inches with dry sand, but no perches are provided. These houses and yards are kept scrupulously clean and as fast as the sand becomes foul it is removed and clean sand added in its place. Male birds are kept in this house until cold weather compels their return to warmer quarters. This system can be followed by fanciers at a very small expense and in the middle and western states where we have practically no cold weather until late in October we recommend it to our readers. Should you desire to have some of your birds moult early or as the breeders term it, have some early show specimens we would recommend the system adopted by Mr. George W. Mitchell, Bristol, Connecticut, the well-known Partridge Cochin breeder,which is not only simple but very effective. He selects such birds as he desires to moult early and places them in small runways in the upper story of one of his poultry houses for that purpose. These little pens are about three feet wide by eight feet in length, and are divided by heavy canvass partitions so that birds cannot see the one in the next pen. There is a small window in the end of each pen that furnishes light and ventilation, but the interior is quite warm. This has its good effects and materially assists the bird to drop its feathers. When birds are placed in these runs they are fed very sparingly for about three weeks, in fact given only enough feed to keep them alive. The record is kept of their weight and quite often birds of the Asiatic variety will lose from two to four pound in this length of time. This reduction of flesh seems to tighten the skin on the fowl and on examining the feathers you will note they have a hard dry feeling and the skin seems to have set to them, holding them as in a vice. This does not look like a good system to hurry up the moult, but watch the next change. As soon as birds have been reduced to the point that there is no life left in the feathers a system of feeding is adopted that brings the bird up in weight. Beef scraps, Spratt's food, a liberal amount of oil meal with plenty of vegetables and a transformation sets in. The skin softens up, releasing its hold on the feathers. The birds begin to fatten up and the feathers simply fall off. I have seen a pen where a single bird was confined where the feathers that had dropped off in twenty-four hours literally covered the floor and birds under this treatment that within one week seemed to loose every feather on them. Under this system the best of care must be given your birds to see they do not catch cold by the sudden change of garments. It will be understood that moulting birds under these conditions is for the fancier who has the time and above all else the true fancier love for his fowls. As to what one gains by this rapid system of moulting and the object in adopting it is this: By having your birds moult in this way all of the new feathers are starting at one time and from the time their plumage begins to grow until it has reached its full length, the bird is sound in color. There is no spatchy sunburned feathers to mar the beauty of any section and the bird is really in show conditions so far as color is concerned before their plumage is half grown.

The varieties referred to in this article, both at Oakland Farm and Bristol, Connecticut, are Cochins and Brahmas, but other varieties could be handled in the same way with equal success. Remember, birds in moult require good feed and a variety that will produce fathers, and above all things, give them good attention. I will give here a ration that I have found works satisfactorily in the American varieties and presume it will works just as well in Asiatic or other varieties. One pint of oil meal, one gallon of cracked corn, one gallon of ground oats, and one gallon of bran, mixed well together. This makes a cheap feed. Would mix this in milk or water, drained from a vessel where meat had been boiled. Another feed, and one that is very cheap, and one the fowls seem to relish and do well on, is potatoes or turnips boiled in a thick liquid drained from a vessel where meat has been boiled. Take what the butcher would term a five-cent boiling piece of cheap meat, add to this quite a large piece of suet, boil in a large vessel, having it covered completely with water. Mix this with your vegetable mash, then add enough bran to make the feed crumbly, and you will find your fowls will do well and come through moult in good condition and at very little expense.—Theo. Hewes, in Inland Poultry Journal.

NEW YORK STATE POULTRY SOCIETY.

The poultry exhibit at the New York State Fair, which is to be held September 5 to 10, gives promise of an especially good one, considerable new interest is being taken in it, this interest being awakened by the announcement of the provision of new coops. For these, those interested will have to thank the efficient superintendent of the past several years, Mr. John D. Jaquins, who has done much to help the poultry interest here.

The Empire Cooping company will furnish these new coops and Superintendent Jaquins has promised an innovation with regard to laying out the floor plan for them.

Sufficient interest has not been taken in this show by the poultrymen of this state, an indifference has been displayed in both interest and support. This is not what will lead to better things on the part of the management, and it is hoped that the breeders will take a greater pride and help by exhibiting and a greater interest to make this an even greater show than it is.

A very liberal classification of the different varieties has been provided for, the premiums are liberal and with able assistance to help care for the exhibits, every inducement is offered to breeders to make a display.

The New York State Poultry society will meet on the fair grounds Wednesday, September 7. Members are requested to be present. Those who are desirous of joining can obtain application blanks by addressing the secretary,

BRAHMAS, COCHINS, LANGSHANS.

At Last Have a Book "All to Themselves, and It Is the Best Yet.

Our readers who year after year have stood by these truly thoroughbred fowls, the Brahmas, Cochins and Langshans, will be delighted to know that at last there has been published a book worthy of these old-time standard fowls, a book that has no room for other breeds, but takes in all varieties of the breeds named. It is the book we have been waiting for, anxious to place it early in the hands of those of our readers who maintain that there are none to compare with the good old substantial, feather-legged Asiatics—progenitors of the best there is in poultrydom to-day.

This new book, "The Asiatics," gives Full Details of Their Origin; Peculiarities of Shape and Color; Egg Production and Market Qualities. It treats extensively on Breeding and Mating for Best Results, and goes deeply into the subject of Exhibiting,in addition to giving Detailed Illustrated Instructions on Judging. It is a Standard in itself, and is contributed to by leading breeders, exhibitors, and judges who have made their names famous through their experience.

To say that it is fully ilustrated conveys but a slight idea of its pictorial contents. It contains two full page color plates, each worth the price of the complete book, and fourteen full page Illustrations by Franklane L.Sewell, America's leading poultry artist, also over fifty additional drawings and photographs of specimen feathers and winning birds at the leading shows. The cover is in three colors.

The wealth of reading matter in its ninety-six pages cannot be given here. Suffice it is to say that the contents cover the subject, and that the regular price of the book (50 cents, postpaid) is many times represented in a single article. The value of the book is far greater than its price.

(This book will be sent free to anyone sending us one dollar for a yearly subscription to The American Fancier.) Address: American Fancier, Johnstown, N. Y.

POULTRY ENTRIES FOR WORLD'S FAIR.

The rules of the Department of Live Stock of the Universal Exposition provide that a separate application blank for making entries must be used by respective exhibitors for each variety of poultry, ducks, geese, turkeys, etc. The perfect form of blank provided for entry of poultry exhibited at the World's Fair saves the exhibitor all the usual trouble of writing the details concerning entries. After giving the number of the class and variety of the poultry he exhibits at the top of the blank nothing further is necessary to complete the same than to check the entries the exhibitor may wish to make, name the breeder, sign his name and forward the blank with remittance for coops to Col. Charles F. Mills, chief of the Department of Live Stock, World's Fair Grounds, St.Louis, Mo.

The World's Fair of 1904 is the first exposition to give due recognition to the breeder of the prize stock exhibited and the rule relating thereto reads as follows:

"4. Awards to breeders will follow those in the regular classes to owners and consist of badges and certificates. The badges and certificates will be provided for the purpose of thereby giving due prominence to the breeder's skill, which makes possible the exhibition of animals worthy of a prize at the Universal Exposition of 1904."

Exhibitors of poultry will see the necessity of filing without delay with the chief of the Department of Live Stock of the World's Fair a list containing the names of each variety of land and water fowls, capons, etc., for which blanks are desired.

Mr. T. E. Orr, the Superintendent of Poultry for the World's Fair, is making preparations for an exhibit of ten thousand birds, and cannot be expected to manage this great undertaking successfully unless exhibitors file complete and correct applications for the entry of their birds. Exhibitors of poultry generally have made up their minds what they will show at the World's Fair, and should not delay filing entries.

PIGEONS AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

The committee of the American Poultry Association, appointed to receive and care for the poultry and pigeons at the World's Fair at St. Louis, has been very fortunate in securing the services of Mr. George Ewald of Cincinnati, Ohio, to aid in receiving and caring for the pigeon exhibit. Mr. Ewald is well and favorably known to pigeon fanciers both in the United States and elsewhere, and is a gentleman of wide and successful experience in the show room. While he will represent and assist the committee of the American Poultry Association and not the Exposition, the appointment has the full approval of Colonel Charles F. Mills, chief of the Exposition Department of Live Stock, who has completed arrangements for the best of management for the show of poultry and pigeons. Mr. T. E. Orr, the superintendent of the poultry show of the World's Fair, is the secretary of the American Poultry Association and stands on the front line with the leading home and foreign experts in all that pertains to the breeding and exhibition of poultry.

The committee of the American Poultry Association having charge of the shipment and care of the poultry exhibited at the Universal Exposition consists of Henry Steinmesch, St. Louis, T. F. McGrew, New York, and U. R. Fishel of Indiana.

Entries for displays of poultry, pigeons, and pet stock at the World's Fair will close September 10, 1904.

THE ORPINGTON DEAL.

A Story of Several Chapters.

Chapter I.

Editor American Fancier:

Some weeks ago I was requested in a rather diplomatic way by a certain Orpington breeder to withdraw my ad. from the American Fancier, because Mr. Drevenstedt published an article from the pen of an Orpington enemy which was, no doubt, very detrimental to the so popular Orpingtons. If I am not mistaken that article was published about two months ago and signed by Mr. Ignorance of Backwoodsville.

You were fearless enough to print that man's unreasonable attack on the Orpingtons; you were also just and impartial enough to print the replies in vindication of the Orpingtons. Your policy in this case it seems to me was very prudent. Damnant quot non intelligent.

Kindly continue my Orpington ad. for another year, which, I think, will expire in October.

Yours very truly,
DR. PAUL KYLE,

BIG DUCK BUSINESS.

From historic Gettysburg comes to Washington quite often during the busy season a German minister who has made a most pronounced success in raising Imperial Pekin ducks. His duck farm near White Hill is an important industry, the home of 6,000 ducks at present, and from it ducks are shipped to all parts of the country. This spring 320 ducks on the farm laid 30,000 eggs. Hundreds of eggs are sold for breeding purposes in states as far away as Vermont, Indiana and Georgia. Eggs that are defecive in shell formation are sold to bakers and confectioners, and to other persons who desire them for cooking purposes. The ducks are killed, stripped of their feathers,and shipped chiefly to markets, restaurants hotels and dealers in Pittsburg, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. Some are sent to New York, but the market there is not considered so desirable. The demand exceeds the supply, although the product on the farm is constantly being increased. To clean the fowls of their feathers, a dozen or more women of the neighborhood are engaged. They enjoy the work, as it enables them to meet together and discuss the news of the neighborhood, something after the manner of the old sewing circle.—Country Gentleman.

Subscribers will kindly read the notice which appears every week on the editorial page of The American Fancier. When you receive a notice that your subscription has expired and you do not wish to renew the same, please notify us at once or advise your postmaster or letter carrier that you desire to have the paper stopped. This costs nothing and is much more satisfactory, to all concerned, than to continue to accept the paper for a year or two and then to heap abuse on the publisher for assuming that you intend to pay for it.

The article on our title-page is a clear statement of facts. The writer, Mr. G. O. Brown, is editorially connected with the Baltimore Sun and has visited the Hagerstown Fair as judge and correspondent for over eighteen years. The evolution of that great show and the national reputation it has attained have done much to elevate the fall poultry shows in other states. The dominating spirit of John L. Cost has made all this possible, and to him most of the credit is due for the results attained. As a show manager he is in a class by himself.

The Western Fancier is the name of a new monthly paper published at Los Angeles, California. It is handsomely gotten up and to judge by the first number should prove a success in all directions. We extend to Mr. Condee, the editor-publisher, our best wishes for the success of his venture.

President D. Lincoln Orr visited with Secretary T. E. Orr, of the American Poultry Association, at the latter's home, Beaver, Pa., last week.

It was purely a business trip, but we are reliably informed that "Tom" Orr entertained his guest by making him pitch hay, and it is whispered that "Link" Orr took the train for home Saturday in order to escape the Puritan Sabbath lesson prepared for him by Deacon "Tom" Orr.

The National White Wyandotte Club will hold its annual meeting at the Madison Square Garden New York show in 1905, so the secretary, Mr. Ross C. Hallock, informs us.

Our old college chum, Mr. Ferdinand Bantam Zimmer, Gloversville, N. Y., while for a time being lost to the poultry world, owing to his avalanche of business in Beagles, has just returned to feathery earth by announcing a successful hatch from imported B. B. Red Game Bantam eggs sent him from the yards of Mr. Wingfield, England. He succeeded in hatching six fine chicks from the twelve fertile eggs in the bunch. This is a good record, as the eggs were detained nine days at the Custom House in New York city, besides enjoying mal-de-mere on the Atlantic ocean a week more. "Zim" also has seventy young Beagles with sparkling goo-goo eyes, sipping the morning dew at Debonair kennels. As Mr. Zimmer lives only two miles from us, we have not been able to see him since last winter. It's another case of "distance lends enchantment."

The Empire Cooping Co., Fultonville, N. Y., shipped the entire outfit of new coops and staging for the poultry building at Syracuse, N. Y., this week. Supt. Jacquins and a force of men will be there next week to put everything in place, and, when completed, a model poultry building, with modern, up-to-date furniture will be the result. It has taken years to secure all this, but the advent of Commissioner Wieting, Secretary Shaver and Supt. Jacquins has secured this much wished for result. The Empire State should lead in all such matters, and we are of the opinion, that in this case, old New York is the leader. The real poultry breeders of the state appreciate all this and will remember the men that did the good work.

Cambridge, N. Y., holds a fair every year. So do other nice places. But the Cambridge fair has the reputation of catering to the public and exhibitors in a way that has and will make friends. Especially in the poultry department has it maintained an upper hand, and this year is no exception. The premium list is out with its liberal offers, its good judges and excellent management. Send for a copy and see an up-to-date list.

And here again we find the Empire State "in the lime-light." Secretary N. V. Witbeck sends us a list of the famous Saratoga county fair. We know Mr. Witbeck to be a fine fancier and breeder of poultry and a square man. He has built up his fair on these lines and poultry exhibitors can rest assured that the treatment in store for them is the very best. And Saratoga is a mighty fine place to show at.

We also call attention to the announcement made in our advertising pages of the famous Trenton, N. J., fair. The superintendent of poultry, Mr. W. S. Gladney, Jr., states a few facts that will make even the manager of the big winter shows stop to consider. All we have to say at present is: The Trenton Inter-State fair is a very great and successful institution and its poultry department is run on lines that require the greatest nerve and courage of their convictions of its manager. It is Spartan-like in its demands and equally so in its performance.

There are a few facts regarding the live stock exhibits at St. Louis, published on another page of this issue. They should be carefully read. We will have further information regarding the poultry exhibition after the first of August.

The American Black Minorca Club is getting a "hump on itself" and working the members to get up a list of specials for the "Black Beauties" at St. Louis. Better late than never.

Some strange and fearful rumors are abroad regarding the judging of Black Minorcas at the two New York shows this season. It is up to the "powers that be" to clarify the atmosphere.

Mr. F. H. Stoneburn has resigned his position on the staff of the Storrs Agricultural Experiment Station, Connecticut, to assume a similar position as instructor on poultry culture with the Columbia Poultry Institute, Waterville, N. Y., next September.

We publish the first installment of "The Orpington Deal" in this issue. Other chapters will follow in the near future. Like the first, they will be brief and based on facts.

There are numerous dry and liquid lice-killers on the market, most of which are reliable. Probably the best insecticide is California Buhach. This powder is unusually effective when perfectly fresh. It will drive lice from the lousiest hen in record time. The dust of this powder will paralyze the flies in a room in quick order so that they drop on the floor and can be swept up and destroyed. The powder can be mixed with two or three times its bulk in flour, provided it is absolutely fresh, for dusting chickens.

One of the just complaints made by exhibitors at large fall and winter shows is the assigning of classes to judges without due regard to the abilities of the latter in that direction. It is a well-known fact that at these shows, numerous judges are employed, owing to the large number of birds on exhibition. It is also a fact that every judge has a specialty of some one or more breeds that he feels perfectly confident of passing judgment on. And exhibitors feel that way also. Now what happens? At a number of shows we find experts on Asiatics floundering in their work judging some new breeds or perhaps Games or Game Bantams; while another judge is trying to satisfy his conscience in placing ribbons on Brahmas and Cochins when he ought to be busy handling Leghorns, etc. So bad has this mis-assignment business become that many exhibitors decline to sacrifice birds and prefer to stay at home with them.

The blame rests with the secretary and executive committee as a rule. A man has no business to assign classes who is not a competent judge of the abilities of the men he engages to do the work. It becomes a farce and disgusts real fanciers. The only remedy is, announce the judge and the classes he has. It takes nerve to do this. But it is honest. Exhibitors have some rights, for their fees enable poultry shows to exist, and some secretaries to get a whole lot of good free advertising and occasionally some pecuniary gain which they deserve.

A SHORT COURSE IN POULTRY DISEASES.

When the excrement secreted by the kidneys, which is normally pure white, appears yellow, though the droppings are solid and the bird appears perfectly healthy, look out for bowel trouble.

When the crop is hard and unyielding there is danger of the bird becoming crop-bound.

When the discharges are streaked with blood it is time to give preventives for diarrhoea.

When the joints are hot and swollen and the fowl is disinclined to stand, rheumatism has taken hold.

When the nostrils are clogged with dirt and the eyes water, ward off a possible case of roup by timely treatment. If the case is bad apply the hatchet and bury the carcass.

When the bird seems lame and has a small swelling on its foot, remove to a house with no perches and oblige it to roost on a bed of straw. Bumble-foot is easily cured in the early stages if the cause is at once removed.

When a hen seems to drown down behind and goes repeatedly to the nest without laying, she is usually suffering from a disorder of the oviduct, and might as well be killed and eaten.

When a bird is "going light," has good appetite, but passes food from the bowels undigested, it is the early stage of consumption and treatment is useless.

When the hen seems giddy and turns round and round, she is probably suffering from apoplexy.

When the bird has leg weakness, with no disorder of the liver, feed lighter and give plenty of bone-forming material.

When new fowls are bought quarantine them until sure they have no disease.

When a fowl has difficulty in breathing look out for pneumonia.

When a fowl is dangerously sick with an organic disease it is worse than useless as a breeder. It is usually safer to kill a bad case of illness than to try to cure it.—Farmers' Gazette, Canada.

BROWN RED GAME BANTAMS.

The history of the brown red Bantam is entertaining, from the fact that the present excellence, which marks the English specimens, is due in very great measure to the exertions, the successful exertions, we are bound to say, of one enthusiast, a man of rarest sagacity and indomitable perseverance. Thirty-five or forty years ago in England brown reds were almost unknown in the prize lists of British shows, for, whereas, the large variety (or full Game as we call it here) were easily ahead of other large varieties, the Bantam specimen was not up to the quality of black reds, pyles or duckwings. But, by steady perseverance and at a cost of hundreds of pounds, Mr. Dan Clayton, of Menstone, brought them out of the nimbus, and at Otley show, held on May 7, 1904, actually beat with a brown red cockerel the Crystal Palace Cup black red cockerel. This brown red stood second, and it was generally agreed by fanciers, that it should have beaten Messrs. Heys' winning black red. It was smaller, better shape and easily equal in points of reach and shortness of feather. The brown red is a charming bird, and to those who have not become wedded by chance circumstances to the other varieties may, very easily, on its own merits of beauty, become first favorite. The richness of the black contrasted with the purity of its gold in the gold cock, is very attractive. Non-fanciers are not wanting, who instantly pounce upon the striking colors, as the most beautiful of all varieties, whilst the pullet, with her rich bettle green plumage and lovely laced breast, is a very handsome mate and shows off her lines to perfection. The gypsy face, the dark legs and eyes, are very effective, and as the birds pass the early chicken stage and get to about a year old they do not present that worn out, faded, grizzly look both duckwing and black red pullets are apt to put on. A laying season does not nearly spoil them as much as it spoils the before mentioned varieties. The deep sheeny black makes them always respectable in the same way as it is apt to convey the same idea about humanity clothed therein, and the gold, whether in the breast lacing of both birds, or top color of the cock, seems, as gold is apt, in this drossy world of ours to give a sense of wealth and beauty and comfort. This figure of speech I lay no claim to. It is the property of the pioneer of the breed.

I have questioned Mr. Dan Clayton very closely about his hobby. He is frank, honorable and courteous to the last degree. He freely own that there have been ups and downs. That he has not merely turned a handle and out has a come a winner to order as a sausage from a machine. There have been many and devious ways. There has been great expense and some failure. But ultimate triumph forgets the long years of patient and anxious care, and rejoices at the position to which the brown red has at length been brought when it can beat the best black red living. Brown reds are essentially healthy birds as Bantams go. They have a good constitution and if properly dealt with can stand their full share of weather. But let me drop a hint for all breeders of the same. I am not stealing it, but I should have done so if I had not been so freely presented with it by the great breeder himself. It is about single specimen birds and the houses in which they are wintered. Little cockerel boxes I call them. What a grand thing, I thought at once, for America with its snow. The cockerel box is a little structure some three feet long, Mr. Clayton's own device. At a guess I should say a foot wide and a foot up to the eaves of the little span roof. Now, imagine this, with a snug little house, occupying just one-third of its cubical contents, so that two feet of run are left. The front side of the run is boarded up, say five inches or so from the ground. Between this and the eaves the front is open, with upright bars, at such a distance apart that the hand can easily be inserted between the bars to remove a bird if required. Over this open front is a movable fine mesh wire shield to prevent any outside brother arranging a duel. These cockerel boxes have no bottoms, and they are all pushed along the grass whereon they have rested all night, so that there is a fresh, sweet run for the day. Sometimes changes of ground are made during the day in warm weather. We are assured that cockerels and cocks, too, for the matter of that, pass in perfect health months and months of both winter and summer weather thus confined. In this way, upon a lawn or the edge of a bowling green, quite a number of odd birds can be kept in perfect trim.

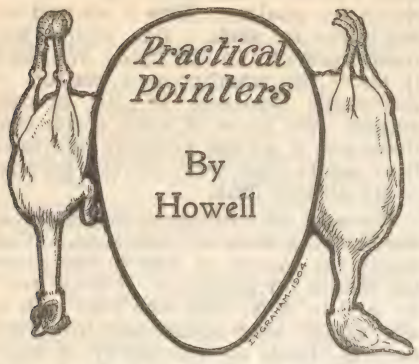
The season of breeding in England runs practically through the first six months of the year. Of course pullets can be bred a little later than can the cocks, and hatching operations may go on well into June, with us here in England. If the cocks are kept well away from the hens or pullets till the actual breeding season commences, the eggs will prove very fertile very early on. But unless the season be mild and good accommodation is to hand for sheltering the chickens, there is not much object in getting the eggs hatched before late March. We opine that the bulk of the chickens are bred in April and May.

Breeders of this lovely variety are in great feather at present over the prospects of the new Brown Red and Birchen Club's work during the forthcoming year. This club received its inauguration at the Otley show, and is now fairly started with a set of rules, committee, officers, etc., and its already well to do financial status and its determination to support both open and limit classes at the forthcoming Bantam exhibitions will carve out for both brown reds and birchens, it is hoped, such a future as they have not so far experienced in the past. As some indication of the upward move that has already begun, we think we are right in saying Mr. Clayton must be very near the end of the second £200's worth that he has parted with during the past few weeks. It was a significant fact that Mr. Shaw-Haigh, the first president of the club, bought Mr. Clayton's second exhibit at Otley Show, a pretty little bird, more heavily laced than the prize bird, for the sum of £25, and for the winning bird Mr. Clayton refused £50. This latter bird is undoubtedly the best that has ever been produced.

Another excellent thing I saw at the same place was the winter quarters of the breeding pens, including their covered runs for snowy weather. Briefly, the central part of the wooden structure, which was altogether most substantially built and roofed with wood and galvanized iron (the latter painted tile color), was a summer house, with seats around for a small party. Adjoining this, on either side, was a sleeping compartment for a decent size pen of birds. These were entirely unconnected, of course, with the larger central rooms. Then on the further side of the sleeping compartments, there was the covered room, much like a small cricket pavilion, but the whole front of each from floor to roof glazed with large substantial panes of glass after the manner of a greenhouse front, but this glass front running, as I have said, from floor to roof. These covered runs, forming the ends of the building are each ten feet square and covered with peat moss. Nothing could be more cosy for the birds in extremely inclement weather.

Bantams up-to-date, and especially Game Bantams, are not generally basket-fillers in the matters of eggs, but they fulfil their duties, do brown reds in this respect, as well as any of the other varieties, and the chickens are not more difficult to rear than their confreres, the black reds. This, no doubt, is due, in a measure, to the absence of that clasing about to shows, which the other varieties have received. Only the wealthiest of men can possibly give the prices for Game Bantams that are now asked for the genuine blue blood, unless purchasers try to run off the initial cost by competing frequently at shows. And generations of bad usage in this respect must have had their influence on the over-shown varieties. But brown reds,owing to the less frequent classes hitherto offered, have been exempt from this hard usage, and there is a vigor and vitality in our English birds' constitutions, that expresses itself in the rare gloss and hardy condition to which they can be brought. The standards of perfection, as at present passed by the new club, places the principal points in the following order: Color, shape and style, feather and size. Now it must be admitted that color is pre-eminent. Long, long ago, could shape and style have been obtained, had admixture with other varieties been resorted to. But the blood must be kept pure, and so color, including gypsy face, and dark eye, has had to come on by slow degrees, and is most difficult of attainment in anything like ideal perfection. Naturally, good color should count before other points. Then shape and style should rank up into second place. We must have a Game shape to place our color on, or we have no Game Bantams. So that shape, style and reach, should take precedence over feather and mere size. Feather is not easy to obtain in excellence. It is now obtained short, very short. The winning cockerel referred to above was shorter in hackle than any black red present (and there were Palace winners). Its sickles were equally as short as those of the first prize bird, but perhaps a trifle wider and hardly so sheeny. Short, hard feather must never be overlooked. Size naturally comes last. We want Bantams, of course, and small Bantams, too, but it is the height of absurdity for a show pullet to be so small that she cannot breed, or her first egg delivers her to death. Anyhow, the first pullet at Otley (for Mr. Clayton won 1st and 3d in brown red hens against black rads) was the smallest Game Bantam pullet in the crowded classes of this big and eventful fixture.

In some of the English fancy papers appear a stray letter or two commending the action of the International Show authorities in fixing upon the same week as the Palace for their great show. Already the former has got some clubs on its side. But it remains to be seen whether they will get the majority. The Crystal Palace is the Crystal Palace all the world over. There is no other building like it, as a venue for a poultry show. It has old associations to the fancier, and it carries a power no other show has yet attained it. First at the Crystal Palace! It is the dream of the young fancier, the memory of the old! To have bred a bird, which has carried off first at the Palace, is to have reached the summit of fancier desire. Not that we do not very highly appreciate the International. Last year it was, I believe, the record show of the world for poultry. Give it all and every honor for such. But there was room for it at another time. We hardly know yet, whether as a matter of policy it's justified in its present course. We know of some clubs, that it cannot, if we are properly informed, have again this year, simply because of its altered date.



We hear of nothing in England but the thriving state of chickens. Certainly the month of May is the growing month for chickens. If they won't do well in May, they won't do well at all. Green bone seems all the rage for big breeds as a producer of bone, and hence big frame. And you cannot have a big bird on a small frame. Molassine meal some are using, too. If it be true that treacle is such an excellent thing as horse keep, it may prove useful in its various forms as a poultry diet, too. It is said to produce both flesh and muscle.

The one thing English breeders have so far had to contend badly against is want of sun, hence want of seasonable warmth to chickens. Mr. John Wharton, of Hawes, the great pioneer of partridge and silver pencilled Wyandottes in England, says he has never known the weather so bleak and cold. Certainly, the weather is, and has been, such in many places, but again, we have a letter this morning from Mr. Clement Payne, of Baldersby Vicarage, York, one of our essentially crack buff Orpington breeders, whose word can be relied on implicitly to the letter, and he is grateful for the rain, which was much wanted in his part of the country. This breeder seems to be about half ready for show already, having very forward chickens, big, strapping, good colored youngsters of the right stamp, and eventually designed for our largest shows. Payne feeds on new milk amongst other thing. Now, my worthy cousins across the Atlantic, what do you say to milk sop every morning made with milk straight from the cow? Personally, from what I gather here and there and elsewhere, these big breeders are at full stretch one against another, and nothing is too good, or too expensive to be fed to the fowls, provided it will land the said fowls into the front rank.—J. N. Williams, in Canadian Poultry Review.

MILK FOR POULTRY.

Milk cannot take the place of meat, as it is not sufficiently concentrated, hence the hens could not drink enough of it to supply their wants; but it is claimed that if a gill of linseel-meal is added to a pint of milk, and the milk then used for mixing ground grain, it will largely assist in providing a complete food. Milk should be allowed, however, but should be given in vessels which will prevent filth from getting into it, and the vessels should be cleaned daily, consequently it requires a little more labor to supply milk than to feed grain. Variety of food cheapens its cost, as there is more product when the food is varied. Corn and wheat are standard foods for poultry, and farmers have contented themselves that grain is sufficient; but it has been demonstrated that when fresh milk has been given to chicks intended to be sold as "broilers," the gain, when milk is added to the grain ration, is nearly twice as much as when grain alone is used. If milk can be conveniently given to laying hens, larger profits will be derived by thus utilizing the waste products than by feeding to swine. As skim-milk and buttermilk contain nearly all the elements of food, the eggs are more easily produced by hens fed upon such than when they are not otherwise provided, and every farmer should allow the hens a share of the skim-milk and buttermilk.—Farm and Fireside.

Mr. Howell, associate editor of The American Fancier, will furnish weekly reports on the egg and poultry market, and answer all questions submitted to him relating to commercial and practical poultry keeping. When replies are requested to be sent by letter, stamps must be enclosed and letters addressed to George E. Howell, 70 Christopher St., New York City.

Fresh killed Phila. broilers, 4 lbs. average per pair, 30c.; 3 lbs. average, 25c.; other nearby, 24 to 26c.; small, 21 to 23c.; fowls, 13½c.; turkeys, 14 to 15c. per lb. The good old summer time is the chicken man's harvest of manifold labors, he not only has the growing crop of youngsters to think about and care for, to sort out those with show room promise, and those labelled "billed through to the chopping block," but he must decide which among his breeding and laying stock shall, barring unforeseen difficulties, pass another winter under his roof, much of this latter depends on the result of moulting. Many a good pullet has moulted into a valueless hen from a fancy standpoint.

It is these things that compel the poultryman to keep awake and on the jump. If he is a good general he will decide now on many of the details of the coming fall and winter campaigns.

I wish I could impress on the minds of every poultry-breeder the advantage of an over-critical and painstaking selection of next year's breeding stock. For the benefit of your own pocket let the males be from your heaviest layers, let them be the thrifty and quick maturing ones, where a Fancier is selling a breeding male to another, he is doubly responsible, first to his own conscience in that he do justice to his neighbor, and secondly that he sell something that improves, not deteriorates. If I buy a breeding bird and the selling party makes an extravagant claim about his breeding ability, which he is not able to fulfill, then that man should be in state prison along with the counterfeiter and green goods man.

Don't sell a quality of goods you cannot deliver. If you have market stock, ask market prices.

What a grand thing for the poultry industry of this country if every breeding pen this coming year was headed by a thoroughbred sire, from the meanest pen of scrubs up to the choicest strains of purebred stock. It has been under just such a system of breeding the Jersey cattle, the horses in France, the sheep in England, etc., have reached the fine state of development that has caused them to be sought the world over.

Let us do this thing right, strive to improve, to perfect, to overtop all competitors.

If breeding for eggs, try and produce an extra dozen a year per hen; if for market, an extra pound of flesh in a given length of time, and if for the show room, something unapproachable in points of excellence.

These things can only be done by wise selection and judicious mating of the breeding stock.

Sometimes fowls, like their owners, deviate from the orthodox path, and don't do what they are expected to do and according to established rules they should do, then there is a time. Just as when a chicken scribe under the softening influence of the summer sun allows his fancy to wander and his pen praises some earnest mortal, who never knew how to play the politics of the fancy poultry business, and to whom a word of praise quickens the blood from a heartfelt sense of having done justice to a fellow being, and perhaps cements still stronger a bond of friendship, caring not a whit about the commercial advantage of such a mention.

But what doth the wise critic? He gets up on his hind legs, he hollers puff, did you get paid for it? or some other wail of like character from his suspicious soul.

Let me tell you a little story. Years ago an almost regular Sunday visitor to my plant was a half grown boy with a touch of chicken fever, his enthusiasm enlisted the gray-headed father in the ranks. They started with a new breed which had just been manufactured. At their first show they got nothing—while their young birds appeared to be heads and shoulders over anything in the class they failed to win. They approached the subject of my "puff," thoroughly disgusted and about to drop out of the ranks. He could have purchased these valuable birds for a song, but instead he showed them why a poor selection had discounted the good points of the remainder of the exhibit. The result was they remained in the fancy and to-day are known as heavy winners with their birds and solid fanciers.

The question is, did the Good Samaritan deserve his puff?

It is hard to suit all in this world, as instance our Chinese laundryman across the street. John insisted on buying some eggs that had been doing sign duty in the window for a long time. Not finding them, upon a more intimate acquaintance, to his liking, he kicked. We explained to him that a learned countryman of his used to take his eggs three hundred years old, and these were not a fractional part of that, but the Chink, like the critic, wasn't satisfied.

WORLD'S FAIR LIVE STOCK CITY.

The attention of the World's Fair management is now in great part focussed on the early completion of the Forum, Live Stock Congress Hall and Barns, covering over thirty acres, and which constitute the Live Stock City of the Exposition.

The live stock site is on the highest ground within the Exposition enclosure, south of the Palace of Horticulture and adjoining a station of the Intramural railroad, with four street car lines on which passengers can be transported direct to the live stock city of the Exposition, viz.: Market cars (through), and the Taylor, Choteau and Laclede cars by transfer at the Inside Inn.

The live stock city is a scene of great activity and the army of men and teams employed thereon day and night confirm the assurance given in the appended letter of President Francis that complete preparations will be made by the Exposition for the display of live stock on the date advertised by the Exposition. President Francis writes about the status of the Live Stock Show as follows:

St. Louis, Mo., July 21, 1904.

My Dear Sir:—

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your esteemed favor making inquiry about the status of the exhibit of live stock at the World's Fair.

It gives me pleasure to assure you that the contracts made for the construction of the Live Stock Forum, the Live Stock Congress Hall, the Barns and other improvements needed for the Live Stock Show provide for such penalties as will ensure the completion of these structures in time for the opening of the show on the date advertised.

A personal examination of the live stock site of the Exposition, now occupied day and night with a large force of men engaged in the construction of the buildings needed for this exhibition will remove all doubt as to the entire completion of all the arrangements in ample time for the conduct of the show as outlined in the published announcement.

The unprecedented number of entries filed at this early date by home and foreign exhibitors with the Department of Live Stock attests the fact that men best qualified to judge and who have taken the pains to make inquiry concerning the status of the Live Stock Show have unlimited confidence in the assurance of the Exposition that suitable accommodations would be provided in ample time for the installation of exhibits, and that all matters pertaining to the conduct of the Live Stock Show would be most creditable to the management and the live stock industry.

You can advise your constituents who have been misinformed in reference to the completion of the live stock structures and the conduct of the show on the original plan advertised and thereby been influenced to delay filing their entries, that such entries will be received up to the limit of the stall accommodations. This privilege will be extended in similar cases to other exhibitors residing elsewhere.

I beg leave to call your attention to the announcement of the Exposition concerning the Live Stock Show, which outlines its character and scope and reads as follows:

"The wide extent of the classification, a list of prizes never before equalled in extent or generosity, together with the ample and attractive provisions intended for the comfort and exhibition of the entries will, as a whole, be fully in keeping with the magnitude and importance of the industry to which they pertain. All these have been planned upon a scale and breadth of liberality heretofore unknown, and suggest every facility for the instruction and entertainment of visitors interested in animal husbandry and its wonderful recent progress, as well as to all who would know more of their reach and what they imply.

"The appropriation of $280,000 of Exposition money for prizes to live stock, to which have been added large sums from states and associations of breeders, makes possible and assures in each class a presentation of and a competition between the best specimens in existence—an assemblage of quality whereby will be determined the present summit level of human skill and endeavor in animal development.

"That the effort must give wholesome impetus to an advancement and resetting of breeding, feeding and Exposition standards for surpassing any heretofore attained, is the earnest conviction of those who have wrought its plans and provided the ways and means for its making."

The full confidence in the creditable and satisfactory conduct of the Live Stock Show so unanimously expressed by exhibitors and the general public, I am pleased to note, is fully confirmed in your letters.

You can continue to assure the exhibitors you represent of just and competent awards and the most courteous and helpful assistance in all matters pertaining to the Live Stock Show of the Exposition.

In this connection I desire, in closing, to most heartily congratulate you and the Missouri Commission you represent, on the munificent appropriation of one hundred thousand dollars for the encouragement of a state exhibit of live stock at the World's Fair.

The Exposition and special prizes for the Live Stock Show of the World's Fair provides an aggregate sum of $438,702.25 for the Stock Show, a sum nearly three times the amount offered for like purpose at any previous exhibition.

For further information concerning live stock entries, awards, judges, etc., you are referred to Col. Charles F. Mills, the Chief of the Department of Live Stock, who has entire charge of all such matters.

Very truly yours,

D. R. FRANCIS,
President.

THE HERALD SQUARE NEW YORK SHOW.

Editor American Fancier:

In reference to the auction sale we wish to state that a great number of replies have been received favoring this new feature, an explanation of which will appear in our premium list. In our preliminary circular of April it was stated that from 20,000 to 40,000 people enter Macy's daily. This, however is an error. We have been informed and fully convinced that between 15,000 and 20,000 persons frequent Macy's department store daily. Thus the exhibits will be prominently brought before the public. Owing to a mistake the entrance fee for pens was announced to be $2 instead of $2.50, and for bantams 50 cents instead of $1. The first prize money should read $2.50 instead of $2. The Empire Cooping Co., of Fultonville, N. Y., has been engaged to coop the show. The Perfection Chemical Co. of Flushing, will look after the disinfecting. The following is a list of judges thus far engaged: J. H. Drevenstedt, T. F. McGrew, J. D. Nevins, F. H. Castner, T. Tiemann, W. Theo. Wittman, Daniel P. Shove, F. W. Otte, jr., A. J. Kreutter, Chas. M. Smith, John J. Yelton, Geo. Feather, G. W. Spohn, F. H. S. Morrison, Geo. W. Weed, Frank D. Ham, C. E. Twombly, Wellington W. Kennedy, A. F. Peirce, Geo. Thurmann, Theo. F. Jager, Dr. R. Ottolengui. The Association believes that reliable men have been engaged as judges to uphold the high standard which is demanded by a show held in New York city in the finest exhibition hall in the center of the metropolis. It is the desire and ambition of this association to raise the Standard of Perfection so as to approach more clearly the ideal poultry and pet stock show. With this end in view we wish to thank all fanciers and breeders for their promised support and beg to remain in the meantime,

Yours most truly,

CHARLES E. GAUSS,
Secretary.

DR. PAUL KYLE.
President of the Association of Poultry and Pet Stock Breeders.

THE BLACK LANGSHAN.

It has been well said that "all things come to those that wait." And so at last we have another Langshan Club, and a truer than that so long dominant, and which, though formed for the purpose of preserving the bird in its imported purity, has so far betrayed its trust, through the inertness of weak-kneed show committees or managers, as to provide its own judges (save the mark), or awarders of prizes, to the exclusion and detriment of the far better formed and truer breed and thereby has driven from England its foreign commerce for one of our best "all round fowls."

Those who would have kept the Langshan have had the club type forced upon them as that or none. Now we are to have a Croad Langshan Club, which will, I trust, strive to rule and insist on justice being done, and the birds kept and shown shall have at least an equal chance of prize-winning as the ill-shaped, gaukey monstrosities now pressed into English notice by a few tolerated faddists. And I may add that I am delighted to learn from Mr. A. Fletcher Houseman that the new club promises to be "a very strong one, so rapidly are sensible poulters joining it." This, in the face of the foolish preference now given to a richly colored egg, is indeed good news, and will doubtless largely help to raise our country in both her food and egg production; and therefore I most sincerely hope and trust that many more members may flock to the standard of the new club—the Croad or the imported type of bird, the Langshan true and good.

In "Poultry," for May 27, 1904, there is given a well-drawn portrait of a cockerel, which is designated as a prize black Langshan at several shows. As I have seen a large number of imported birds, and many of these of high quality, I beg to say that the portrait given does not represent a Langshan at all, but, to my thinking, is a veritable mongrel. But lest it might be said by some faddists that I am biassed, I will quote the criticism of The American Fancier, as showing what contempt is felt in America for the present English Langshan, and deservedly so. In No. 562, p. 4, the editor of this valuable paper says, by way of notice:—"The illustration of a black Langshan cockerel, winner at some of the English shows, which appears in May 27 issue of our esteemed British contemporary "Poultry," is a 'reversal of form,' to use a turf expression. Langshan fanciers on this side of 'the pond' would never pick such a typeless fowl to represent even remotely the stately black Langshan of the famous Croad type that has been the standard here. The bird illustrated has a gamey appearance, albeit a very long back that rises in an inclined plane from base of tail to end of neck feathers, long legs, and thighs, shallow breast, little depth of body, and a gamey tail, with narrow, almost straight sickles. . . . It is a pity to destroy the magnificent points of beauty of one of the greatest and most valuable fowls on earth by following the fad of a select coterie of interested and selfish breeders and judges."

This is not only the American view of our English Langshan club's striking monstrosities; but it is that of other countries who also very rightly will have none of them. However much of this has been brought about in England by the insane supineness of many of the committees of our poultry shows, who, thirsting for entries, allow the spurious Langshan people to elect and send their own individual to award the prizes. I will not say judge, for no man who is a judge of what a Langshan is and should be, could possibly act as many do, and yet the true Langshan breeders allow this. It is time, it has long been time, to rebel against such destructive doings, which have entirely destroyed our foreign trade of this the best all-round fowl in existence. And for this we have also the high authority of the editor of the American Fancier, besides that of those capable of judging what a true Croad Langshan should be, and as known and valued when pure as imported. I sincerely hope that show committees will see their error, and at last be just, and appoint those that are judges, and not merely the nominees of interested people simply to award prizes, which should be won, not gained.—Harrison Weir, Vice-President of the Utility Club, Poultry, England.

poultry shows need judges, the latter are sure to "show up." Among this army, there are a few, who might be termed leading judges,these being more popular, and whose work has been generally more satisfactory. It is no small task for a man to declare which, of a large class of birds, is the best one. A poultry judge should have brains, and what is more, the same should be well developed. A poultry judge, (to score 100 points) should be always honest, sober, thoroughly capable and able to see all sections, both separate and as a whole. He should have good eyesight, should be fearless to act according to his opinion, should be careful and gentle and reasonably rapid. In consideration of the fact that there are no perfect men, they are necessarily lacking in some of the above mentioned features. I think that the first three mentioned qualities are most necessary and, in fact, should be required. Of course, "mistakes occur in the best of families," poultry judges not excepted, yet I think that much "outside kicking" is the result of ignorance on the part of the exhibitor. There are some judges who are careless, because of too much hurry in their work. I have noticed some men judging certain breeds, of which they were incompetent of doing, while with some other breeds they were all right. Because a man has been successful in judging Brahmas is not sign that he knows a Leghorn, or a Plymouth Rock. There is a marked difference in all the breeds, in shape if not color. This is where the "specialty judge" comes in use. At our large shows, many judges are employed, each one to say which is first, second, third and fourth, best in the class of a certain breed, of which it is known he has considerable knowledge. The way to have it is, the right judge in the right place. Don't eat with your knife and try to cut with your fork; it does not look well, and then there is danger of cutting your mouth. It is always better to do right. I think it would be much better if some of the "kickers" who occupy considerable space in the poultry press in trying to express the importance of those past mistakes of others, if they would enter a formal protest, then and there, at the time of happening. By so doing they would show their confidence in the matter (and perhaps their ignorance). However, by getting behind the fence and throwing mud, they show their cowardice, but some are very brave with the pen. I suppose the trouble was—they couldn't think so quick. Let us all try to improve; there is plenty of room. S. L. TUTTLE.

Naugatuck, Conn.

PULLETS FOR LAYERS.

It is the pullets that do the late fall and early winter laying, and if we would have an abundant supply of eggs at the time of highest prices a goodly proportion of our birds must be early hatched and well grown pullets. An experiment illustrating the double profits to be gotten from pullets as compared with year-old hens was carried on at the Utah experiment station, Logan, Utah, a few years ago, and the results were most instructive. Two pens of old hens averaged eighty-five eggs apiece, while two pens of pullets averaged 170 eggs apiece—exactly double the number. The doubled number of eggs laid by the pullets does not rightly present the ratio of profit, however, because from one-half to two-thirds of the increase comes at a time of decidedly higher prices, hence the proportion of profit is much greater. In this Utah experiment the average value of the eggs per hen was 78 cents, while that of the eggs per pullet was $1.78. The food, cost, labor, and interest on buildings, etc., is no greater for a pullet than it is for a hen, and it would seem to be the part of wisdom to have the bulk of our flocks early hatched and well grown.—Farmers' Advocate.

TABASCO SAUCE.

Now look here, Mr. Robert H. Essex, I have a bone to pick with you.

If you are not the guy I am gunning for please pass it along.

On page 544-A, July issue, you are carrying an adv. of a man who has been dead over 12 months.

It says: "The breeding season is practically over. I." (Mind you it says "I") offer a fine opportunity, etc.

I think it is deceiving the buyer is led to believe that this party is still living.

Dead wrong. Call me a lobster, call me anything you please, even a man from "Bosting," but do not call me a deceiver.

Cut it out, Essex, or get a new signature to the advertisement. Don't allow your readers to be deceived.

If you do not know the party is dead write the American Fancier and they can ask me.

And all for the mighty $.

Gee whiz., that Beer soak from Hoboken has at last been pinched. Did you hear his squeak?

Say, old man, you and me and Robby would make a great trio. Eh?

Say, Drev., I am sorry if I got Curtis in trouble about who made all the sketches.

Still it's none of my funerals. If a fellow has a card up his sleeve he must expect to get thumped if caught.

Oh, dear! How my heart fluttered the other day.

Got an official letter from the live stock dept. at St. Louey. Nearly lost my breath.

I said to myself: Old man, you're appointed a judge at the Universal Exposition of 1904. (A la Com. of 3.)

I hugged myself all over the farm; came back, took a cold bath.

Came down on the piazza, called my wife. Now, Matilda, read that letter, please.

She commenced: My Dear Sir,—Your application as superintendent, dated Aug. 14, 1902, duly received and after careful consideration we are pleased to announce to the world that T. E. Orr has been appointed superintendent of World's Fair Poultry Dept.

Well, did you ever! Still we're making history.

I. K. Felch has been asked to judge, but refused on the grounds that Drev. says that all coons look alike.

Say, Drev., I wonder if that man Reveley wants a job.

Did you read all that stuff of his? Sounds nice, reads well, but my, oh my, what yarns!

Do you know there seems to be lots of lobsters in the world.

If he can keep up those tricks, I'll give him good pay.

Well, well! The American Fancier's title is copyrighted. So, so!

That's right, Drev. But why did you not tell us before?

It's the best thing on the pike and it makes history.

Tom Orr says that any hen that lays an egg on Sunday will be sent home.

Well did you ever!

There may be another cause for regrets.

I notice Duston is going to devote all his time now to White Wyandottes.

Wonder if the other breeders will have any cause for regrets at his new move?

I understand that the Com. of 3—I mean the World's Fair Com.—no, not that, either—I mean Tom E. Orr's Com. of 3, have asked Robby to deliver a speech entitled, "How to Mix Paints."

Accepted by the fanciers is rich. Oct. 28 is the day. Don't forget; there'll be history made there.

Gee, Drev., how did you and me hit Howard at the same time on those duck? Great minds, eh!

WEST POINT.

POULTRY HOUSE AND YARDS.

Too often the location of the poultry house is thought to be of minor importance and consequently is given less consideration than that of any other farm building.

Frequently the other buildings are located first and the poultry house placed on the most convenient space, when it should have received consideration before the larger buildings were all located.

In caring for the various classes of live stock the question of labor is always an important item, and the class that requires the closest attention to details, as a rule, requires the greatest amount of labor. As poultry keeping is wholly a business of details the economy of labor in performing the necessary work is of great importance. Buildings not conveniently located and arranged become expensive on account of unnecessary labor.

As it is necessary to visit poultry houses several times each day in the year convenience is of more importance than in case of almost any other farm buildings. The operations must be performed frequently, so that any little inconvenience in the arrangements of the buildings will cause not only extra expense in the care, but in many cases a greater or less neglect of operations that ought to be carefully performed each day.

Poultry houses are likely to be more or less infested with rats and mice unless some means are provided to exclude them, and this should be taken into account in selecting a location. It is generally best to locate the poultry house at some distance from other farm buildings, especially if grain is kept in the latter. Convenience of access and freedom from vermin are two desirable points to be secured, and they depend largely upon the location. Everything considered,it is safest to have the house quite isolated.

A dry, porous soil is always to be preferred as a site for buildings and yards. Cleanliness and freedom from moisture must be secured if the greatest success is to be attained. Without doubt filth and moisture are the causes, either directly or indirectly, of the majority of poultry diseases, and form the stumbling block which brings discouragement and failure to many amateurs. It must not be inferred that poultry cannot be successfully reared and probably kept on many soils, for abundant proof to the contrary is readily furnished by successful poultrymen who have to contend with this kind of land.

The necessity for cleanliness, however, is not disputed by those who have had extended experience in caring for fowls, particularly the less hardy breeds.

That an open, porous soil can be kept comparatively clean with much less labor than a clay soil will be evident to those who are at all acquainted with the habits of domesticated fowls. When the fowls are confined in buildings and yards that part of the yard nearest the buildings will become more or less filthy from the droppings and continual tramping to which it is subjected. A heavy or clayey soil not only retains all of the manure on the surface, but by retarding percolation at times of frequent showers aids materially in giving to the whole surface a complete coating of filth. If a knoll or ridge can be selected, where natural drainage is perfect, the ideal condition will be nearly approached.—Bulletin No. 41, United States Department of Agriculture.

A prize won at Hagerstown is equivalent to one received at New York, Boston, Chicago, or any other great winter show.
It takes good birds to win at Hagerstown for the competion is not local—it is national.
It is a fanciers' show from end to end, Visiting fanciers are "at home" at all times.
The annual parade and banquet are the great features that bring "the clans."
Honors won are bread winners. They sell the stock.
Seven men judge the show, viz: G. O. Brown, J. H. Drevenstedt, D. A. Nichols, F. B. Zimmer, J. F. Craugle, Theodore Hewes and W. J. Stanton.
These men have judged before.
Premium lists will be ready August 1st.
The money you win is ready before you go.

BARRED AND BUFF ROCKS.

I have won the past season at the following shows: Fitchburg, Mass., Stamford, Conn., South Framingham, Mass., Manchester, N. H., New Bedford, Mass. The above Barred Cockerels were all sired by 3d cockerel, 1903, Madison Square Garden, New York winner, 63 cockerels in this class. Reliable Poultry Journal February, 1903, liked this cockerel above all others in the show. I have a few cockerels sired by above cockerel for sale from $4.00 upwards. Standard weight of very even color, barred well all over. If you want to improve your blood these cockerels are what you want. Money returned if birds don't suit you. I have had my pens mated up by one of the leading Poultry Judges in America—4 pens headed by high scoring cockerels. I have also one pen of Buff Rocks. For the cockerel in this pen and two pullets I gave Mr. Higgins, of Orange, Mass., $75. I have not many sittings to dispose of therefore have your orders booked early. My eggs will be from same pens as I breed from myself. Choicest Eggs $2.00 a sitting.

HALDIE NICHOLSON, LEOMINSTER MASS

GEYER'S SCURVY CURE FOR POULTRY was the first article introduced to the public for this purpose, which has been thoroughly tested in the last ten years by many of our brother fanciers who are willing to say with us that there is no other article on the market like this that can be relied on to do its work properly. It is something that the poultry fancier, who appreciates his fine birds, needs very much. What looks more disgraceful than a fine flock of chickens, many, or all of them, having their legs coated with a thick, hard, scabby crust which is called scurvy? It spoils the appearance of the birds and is very annoying to them. It is also contagious. Here we have a sure cure for this ugly disease. By following the directions we guarantee that it will take off that ugly, hard coat and leave the legs clean and smooth and give them their natural color. It also has no equal for healing sores and frosted combs and wattels. It makes them very bright and red. It is just what the exhibitor wants to prepare his birds for the exhibition room. Some of our customers tell us that they have tried it with good results for weak legs. We only ask you to give it a trial. It is put up in tin boxes. Money must accompany all orders. Price, 25 cents. Address, G. A. Geyer, Florin, Pa. 560tf

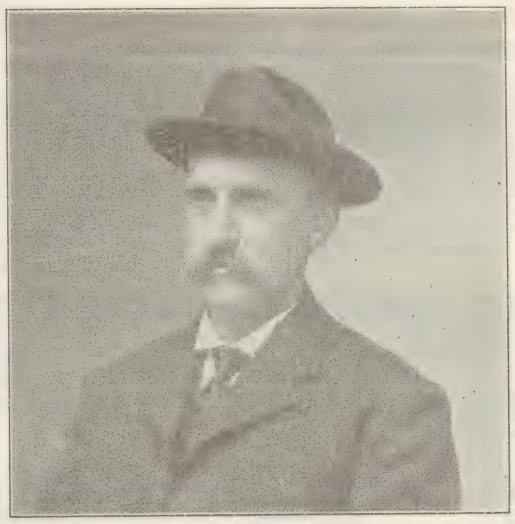
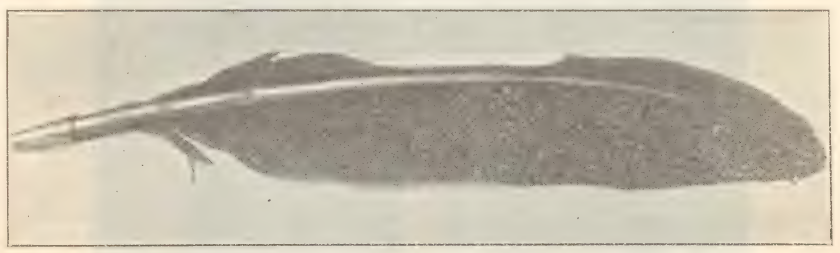
Light Brahmas



History and Development of the Monarch of All Breeds.

[By John Rumbold, Secretary of American Light Brahma Club.]



The Light Brahma is truly the monarch of the poultry-yard. While of Chinese origin it is distinctly an American production, and the great interest in thoroughbred fowls, also commercial poultry, owes to the Light Brahma more than to any other breed or variety its great volume to-day. The Asiatics, when first imported into England and the United States, after the close of the war in 1843, were of every conceivable color and type, but all had the large frame development which made them the wonder and admiration of every beholder, and with their advent begins the "Hen Fever," which has spread to every part of the civilized world.

From these many colored importations have evolved the Light and Dark Brahmas; the Buff, Partridge, White, and Black Cochins; and the Langshans are of the same blood. Every fowl today that has size to recommend it to the favor of breeder, as a market fowl, unquestionably carries more or less of Asiatic blood. From the only information, that is at all reliable, that I have been able to obtain, the first Asiatics were imported into the United States about 1848, and certainly not earlier than 1847, and as all came from the port of Shanghai, China, were all called Shanghais. Amongst the different colored birds imported were some of a "Light Gray," that seemed to more nearly meet the requirements of many as typical of beauty and usefulness combined. It must be remembered that none of these birds of the various colors came near to the present high quality, as seen in the shows of the present time; they were the "rough material" out of which the American and English fanciers have produced the finished product of the present day. At first all these birds were called Shanghais, and it was not until a few years later that their breeders begun hunting up fancy names for their birds to make sales easier and profits greater. These light gray birds were very naturally called Grey Shanghais. The first of these fowls to have their names changed were bred by George P. Burnham, Melrose, Mass., and bought by a Dr. Bennett. Mr. Burnham always stoutly denied the right to call these fowls Brahma Pootras, clinging to the old name of Gray Shanghais as the correct and proper one. Mr. Burnham was the author of the "Hen Fever" that dealt with the rise of the interest in poultry breeding, and gave the comical side of the "fever," as well as the practical side of it.

It may be set down as a fact that the first birds to which the name of "Brahma Pootras" were bred by George P. Burnham, and were hatched and raised in the year 1849, and were bred from a mating or matings of light gray and a darker gray birds. Notwithstanding this fact, there were others who had singled out these fowls as the most interesting and satisfactory of the various colors, and were trying to develop a breed that would breed true to color. This was found to be uphill work, as the parent stock had been bred together so many generations that all colors would come from any mating that could be made, and it was only by the most persistent work year after year that the Light Brahmas have been brought to a standard well nigh perfect.

MR. JOHN RUMBOLD, BALTIMORE, MD.
An ardent fancier and leading breeder of Light Brahmas, Sec.-Treas. of the American Light Brahma Club.

Primary feather from the wing of a Light Brahma male,

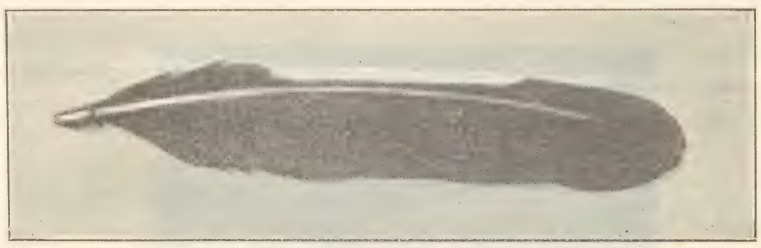
The original imported Asiatics were of as many types as colors; there were birds long in neck and leg; birds medium, and birds short, in this respect. The rage for fowls that could eat off a barrel did more to injure the breed than all else combined. But while many were running after this and that fad there were others who had in their mind's eye the making of a grand, good bird that would prove satisfactory from every point. Prominent among these in a short time was that grand old veteran, Philander. Williams, to whom is given the credit of formulating the first standard of Light Brahmas. As crude as was the material he had at hand, this standard shows distinctly the present type of bird was in his mind, and by successive years of intelligent breeding the goal has been reached. These first fowls (and for years afterward) were mealy hackled, nearly white winged, especially in females, and the tails a mixture of black and white, without any of the fine lacing that now adds so much to their beauty. I wish I had illustrations to show the change from the first fowls, both in type and color, to those of the present day. The American Light Brahma Club has been at a great amount of labor and considerable expense to show to the many friends of this noble breed of fowls what has been accomplished, both in type and color, and the accompanying illustrations are from feathers from the best birds of the best breeders, photographed and half-toned illustrations made from them without retouching. Any one can appreciate the beauty of a fowl of the type illustrated with the finely laced and striped feathers such as these illustrations show. Such have been bred, and this is an earnest that more will be bred, and that the standard of beauty will be raised as the efforts of intelligent breeders are more and more successful. I feel very sorry I have not the new standard so as to draw a parallel between the first and last ones made. I worked very hard to get this last standard set high—higher than any fowl has yet reached, but how far my efforts were successful I am unable to say.

The future of the Light Brahma is in safe hands. No more able or intelligent breeders are living than they, and we yet look to see the day—and not far distant—when this noble fowl will be fully appreciated by a carefully discriminating public.

PREPARING FOR THE MOULT.

As the poultry approach the moulting season, special care and attention must be given to their food supply. Food of a fattening nature, and meat, should be added to the summer ration. They should be thoroughly well fed, so that the strain of growing an entire new set of feathers may be sustained by the feeding plenty of food rather than that they should fall into a depleted condition through lack of proper care and feeding at this critical time.

Ofttimes the question is asked as to whether the moult can be hastened through any care and treatment that might have special influence over the moulting of the poultry. There is no doubt that this may be influenced to a certain limited extent. Fowls may be shut up close in a warm, confined house and fed but little; in fact, reduced almost to the starving point from having but little to eat. When kept in this condition for a week or ten days, they may be turned out to a grass run and fed plentifully with fattening foods, which have a tendency to hasten the moult. We have seen this tried to a limited extent, and while some benefits have been derived in this direction, some who did not thoroughly understand and properly manage the process, gained but poor results—in fact, lost many of the hens they were endeavoring to hasten through the moult.



A covert feather from the tail of a Light Brahma male

All these unnatural methods must be thoroughly understood and properly handled if we hope to gain the proper results. It cannot be practiced by the inexperienced.

Those who make use of such methods must be thoroughly conversant with their uses and abuses as well. Another feature that demands considerable attention during the summer months is the advanced preparation of the poultry that it is hoped will become the prize winners at some of the autumn fairs, or early winter shows. To gain these desirable results one must have his poultry in the very best condition for the fray. Seldom, if ever, will poultry in very bad condition win the coveted prizes at these gatherings, and to have these specimens properly prepared one must begin during the summer months to give them the care and conditions that are necessary to bring them into proper form and feather. Oft-times, the feathers upon the back of one of the most desirable show specimens may be broken off short, close to the back. The continual downpouring of the sun upon this exposed part of the back may blister the skin. To avoid this, it is well to remove the hen to a sheltered place and keep her constantly under shelter of some kind, away from the rays of the sun. Either with the thumb and fingers, or a small pair of tweezers, remove the broken feathers from the back. When these have all been removed, it is well to annoint the back, either with glycerine or sweet cream. Rub a little of either on the inflamed part and leave the rest to nature, only shelter the hen from the sun. Ofttimes, it is desirable to remove broken feathers from the wings, and tail as well. Some go so far as to remove some of the soiled or broken feathers from the body plumage, all of which may be done with successful results, providing they have been removed at least 60 days prior to the time of exhibition.

The necessary requirements of the showroom are, first, the best possible plumage to be obtained and maintained during the season; in addition to this, good condition, thoroughly cleansed heads and their belongings, and shanks and feet as well. Quite too often the neglect of these requirements deprives the exhibitor of the prize that might have been won if the demands of conditions necessary had been carefully looked after. There is no reasonable excuse that can be offered for dirty shanks and feet of exhibition poultry, so long as there is any soap and water to cleanse them. Many go so far, even during the early fall fairs, as to wash the entire body plumage of the specimens to be shown, even though they may be partially in moult. Washing or cleansing of the entire plumage, shanks and feet as well, adds very much to their appearance. One can scarcely imagine the amount of dirt that will accumulate in and upon the plumage of a fowl until they have thoroughly tub-washed the same.

Tub-washing of poultry is a very simple process. Three washtubs are provided, one filled with warm water, as warm as your hands will bear, the second with lukewarm water, the third with cold water. The specimen to be washed is thoroughly doused or soaked in the warm water; then the feathers and the entire body, clear to the skin, is thoroughly rubbed with soap—Ivory soap seems to be the best for this purpose. With this same soap, the legs, shanks and head, and entire plumage, is thoroughly washed. Rub the soap well into the body, using your hands and fingers. There is no danger whatever of breaking the plumage when it is soaked with the water. After the entire specimen has been thoroughly washed clear down to the skin with soap, then lightly rinse it in the same warm water. From this tub remove the specimen to the second tub containing the lukewarm water. After having thoroughly rinsed the entire bird in this lukewarm water, remove it to the tub of cold water, and rinse it again. Allow the water to drain from the specimen, then dry the plumage as much as possible with cloths or towels, always rubbing the plumage the right way of the feathers. After being dried as much as possible with the cloths, place the specimen in a canvas-covered coop. If the sun is shining warm and hot, place the coop out in the direct rays of the sun, but do not allow the rays of the sun to go through the slats of the coop and scorch or sunburns the comb or feathers. When the washing process is made use of in cool or cold weather, the coop containing the washed fowls must be placed near a stove, or in a very warm room (the warmer the better), so that the plumage will be quickly dried.

The secret of success in the show room is to hatch your chicks from eggs which have been laid by the highest quality of poultry. These eggs properly hatched and the chicks well raised and cared for to maturity and through their entire lives while they are kept for exhibition purposes, are surely the most successful, as the result of having been properly raised and cared for, for that special purpose.—Country Gentleman.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 6, 1904.

August is the month that starts the poultry shows each year.

The old saying: "An early bird catches the worm," was never more applicable than now. Early birds are scarce.

The phenomenally cold winter lingering altogether too long in the lap of spring, reduced the chances of good early hatches in the east, north and west. But few early birds were hatched.

The month of June, however, was productive. Thousands of fine, thoroughbred, feathered bipeds saws the light of day, and the fine weather up to date has pushed them along at a winning pace. June chicks will be heard from at even the medium early shows, to judge by the rapid growth they have made thus far.

But the demand for early hatched birds for exhibition purposes is very large. We traveled over to F. B. Zimmer's poultry yards and kennels a few days ago, and "Zim" showed us numerous letters from exhibitors desiring birds to show in September. But, like many others in this section, he could not supply the demand, as his specialties, Bantams, are never hatched early in this climate. But the June, July and August hatched Bantams are "the goods"—for later shows.

Mr. Frank B. Zimmer has added some fine buildings to his poultry and kennel yards, and is just now very busy taking care of about 102 young Beagles that sniff the morning dew, and several hundred Bantams that scratch up his garden patch and banana plantation.

"Zim" is so busy with all this growing stock that he thinks but rarely of leaving "his happy home" to judge chickens. In fact, has refused numerous shows for the coming season on that account. Only the old stand-bys will be favored with his august presence, and they are few and far between. Personally, we are very sorry that "Zim" is eliminating his rotund form and honest old face from the poultry judging arena.

The Washington County Agricultural Society starts the fair business August 23 to 26 at Sandy Hill, N. Y. This is the first of the Northern New York fairs that takes pride in its poultry department. With Dr. Phelps interested this year, and the efficient secretary, S. B. Ambler at the helm, a better show than ever can be looked for.

We are in receipt of the following letter:

Editor American Fancier:—As all the breeders are looking forward to the great St. Louis poultry exhibition this fall, I thought I would write you, and through your valuable paper ask why Mr. Henry Brooks of this city would not make an excellent choice as judge of the show at St. Louis. Mr. Brooks is one of the oldest, as well as one of the most successful breeders of the Game fowl in America and a man that all in the Game fowl know well, and if he should receive the appointment I am sure there would be great satisfaction to all concerned. I would like very much to hear from some of the Game breeders through your paper. A man like Brooks, breeding one variety for thirty years, ought to make an excellent judge and give satisfaction to the fullest extent if appointed. Thanking you in advance for giving this matter attention, I remains, ter attention, I remain,

R. PIPER.

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 1, 1904.

We are very glad to publish the above. We know Mr. Brooks and so do many Game fanciers in the Empire State and Canada. "Brooksy," as "the boys" like to call him, was an old friend of the late John Glasgow, and an exhibitor at the Johnstown, N. Y., shows in the past. Holding a most important and sacred trust as an engineer on one of the famous Lake Shore flyers, he is a man that inspires confidence with all that know him. Honest, capable and good-natured, he is a fancier from the ground up. The American Fancier is pleased to see such a man recommended, and although it has no knowledge of how, where and when the judges at St. Louis are to be appointed, it publishes the above as a disinterested opinion of a man that is worthy to act in the capacity asked for by our correspondent.

Fall fairs are money-makers for the fellows with big strings of poultry. And why not? Some may cavil, kick and squeal because one of the so-called rounders scoops nearly all the ribbons, but they forget that it takes mighty good birds to win prizes, even at small county fairs, in these days. Furthermore, some of the "rounders" sometimes called "hucksters," are men that breed and sell good birds. They must not be confounded with the "hucksters" of ten years ago that simply worked the fairs for a killing. That day is past. There may be a few of that ilk left, but they usually get left when they run up against the "real thing." Besides, the big and fine exhibits at our fall fairs are largely indebted to the "big string" exhibitors.

Mr. John D. Jacquins, superintendent of poultry at the New York State Fair, spent this week at Syracuse, managing the work of placing the new Empire coops in position.

The dates of the Rochester, (N. Y.) show will be pushed one week ahead, so we are informed. This will be done in order not to conflict in any manner with dates of the Madison Square Garden show at New York.

Mr. C. J. Daniels, who for many years past has been the able and popular superintendent of poultry at the great Toronto Industrial Exposition, owing to business matters that require his undivided attention, will not be able to officiate this season. Dr. A. W. Bell of Toronto will manage the poultry department of the Canadian Exposition this year, and a better choice and a worthier successor could not have been selected. Dr. Bell has been identified for many years with the Toronto Fair, is a fancier well known to all, a gentleman and a hustler. We bespeak for him a most successful administration of his office.

The prize list of the sixty-third annual fair of the Dutchess County Agricultural Society has just reached us. Like many of its predecessors, it is a model in its way. The high character of the management is stamped on every page. The premiums are very liberal, the entry fees reasonable. There are no strings attached to any of the prizes offered. The poultry department is as usual in charge of the veteran T. C. Van Wyck, than whom no more capable and honest official exists. The splendid classification, excellent cooping and general management of this poultry and pigeon show are well-known to all exhibitors, consequently large entries reward the liberality of the management year after year. The coming show will be held September 13 to 16, 1904, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Premium list can be obtained by addressing J. M. Booth, Sec., 42 Market St., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Mr. T. F. McGrew, one of the committee in charge of cooping and feeding poultry at the World's Fair, St. Louis, informs us that intending exhibitors can obtain premium lists now, by addressing Col. Mills, Chief of Live Stock Department, St. Louis, Mo.

The Black Minorca Club is hustling to get up some juicy specials to be offered at St. Louis. Better late than never.

Publishers and editors of poultry papers are not actors. The latter seldom or never eat; the former do when they have the price to buy a meal with. And yet several good, pious and well-meaning (?) chicken raisers are imbued with the idea that the purveyors of poultry literature ARE actors.

MR. SIMON HUNTER'S TRIP AROUND THE WORLD

Madam,—I reached London on June 24 per ss. "Rimutaka" from my tour round the world, so was just in time to see the Royal Show.

As promised, I beg to give your readers some account of the great laying competition now proceeding at the Agricultural College, Hawkesbury, New South Wales, Australia, with a few other matters which may be of interest to poultry breeders in this country. The Hawkesbury is situate about thirty miles from Sydney, and just over a mile from Richmond. It is the finest and most up-to-date agricultural college in Australasia, while the Experimental Farm connected therewith is probably second to none in the world. It covers about 2,000 acres, as nearly as I could estimate.

There is accommodation for over 100 pupils, and every branch of agriculture is taught, also fruit culture, ostrich farming, poultry farming, beekeeping, etc., etc. Experiments of many kinds are constantly being made, and the institution (which is run by the Government) is a great boon to agriculturists in both Australia and New Zealand.

Naturally, the poultry department claimed my chief attention. On making myself known, the poultry expert, Mr. Thompson, at once volunteered to show me round, although he was very busy entertaining colonial visitors, of which there are a large number daily, either seeking advice or to purchase stock or eggs for hatching. These are sold from the Government Poultry Farm at moderate prices to farmers, as in addition to the 600 birds taking part in the laying competition, there is a fairly large poultry farm on the place, where most of the leading breeds are kept.

We commenced with the laying competition. This extends for a full year, and is open to the world. There are 100 pens of six pullets to each pen competing. I was sorry to find England not represented, owing to entries being received too late. America and New Zealand are both fairly well represented. The pens are 17 ft. wide by 87 ft. long, and are well grassed and perfectly clean. The houses are 5½ ft. by 4½ ft., open fronts and no bottoms, two houses being built together and divided by 2 in. mesh wire netting.

Swinging vermin-proof roosts are provided, but the trap nest is not used.

FROM 20 INCUBATORS TO 20,000

That is the unbeaten record of the Prairie State Incubators: 20 sold first year—20,000 sold in 1903. Prominent duck and poultry breeders favor the Prairie State because it's always reliable and gives high per cent hatches. The United States Government uses them exclusively. Be sure to send for our free, illustrated catalog full of pictures—among them photos of incubator rooms where 20 to 80 of our machines are in active operation.

The water is given in earthenware jars. Every pen is close boarded round 3 ft. high, with 3 ft. of 2-in. mesh-wire on top. Every bird has one wing cut, so it is impossible for any bird to get out of its pen. No dust-bath is needed, as the earth is sandy and very dry. The grit is entirely sea-shell. All poultry-houses are exactly alike, and are all painted white inside and out.

The whole of the birds were in the pink of health and looking like work. The food consists of two-thirds pollards (sharps) and one-third bran for the morning meal, with maize and wheat alternately at night. Cooked liver is fed separately twice a week, 2 ozs. to each bird. Australian wattle-trees are planted in the centre of each pen for shade and shelter. Much interest is taken in the competition, not only in Australia, but also in New Zealand.

The following is a list of the various pens:

The quality of the birds is a long way behind what is seen at the laying competitions in this country, the buff Orpingtons, on the whole, being the worst specimens, while the black Orpingtons and white Leghorns are the best. The silver Wyandottes, buff Orpingtons and white Leghorns were laying the best.

Many pens, chiefly black Orpingtons, silver Wyandottes and white Leghorns, were excluded for want of room. Greeat credit is due to Mr. Thompson for the efficient manner in which the competition is conducted; everything was in perfect order, and the stock in splendid condition.

I also visited the Experimental Farm at Bathurts, where good work is being done, the Principal, Mr. Peacock, driving me all over the farm and explaining everything en route.

In New Zealand I saw the leading poultry farms, but both here and in Australia the quality of the stock is very inferior from an exhibition standard. Many birds have been imported, but though good prices are paid, very second-rate stuff is too often sent out by unscrupulous dealers. This is like killing the goose that lays the golden egg. I came across many breeders who would like to import good stock, but have lost all confidence. It is high time something was done to expose these swindlers.—Simon Hunter.

P. S.—During by trip I visited South Africa—which was terribly hot—Tasmania, New Zealand, Australia, and returned by America. Of the different places, I much prefer New Zealand, the climate being good and everything connected with agriculture very prosperous, while the North Island is a veritable sportsman's paradise. I spent five weeks trout fishing, and enjoyed grand sport, killing about 200 trout, many weighing over 8 lbs. each. My most valued memento is one I had stuffed and brought back. This is 31 in. long and 21 in. round and weighed over 13 lbs.—S. H.—Feathered Worlds, England.

TABASCO SAUCE.

Did you notice how Howell came back at me?

Georgie is all right and about as slick as comes down the pike.

It's all right, George, and you are all right. I'll take off my hat to you.

I sincerely hope that these squibs of mine are not taken too seriously.

It's only in fun, and "a little nonsense now and then," etc.

Once in a while when I get a chance I give someone a crack, but there is no malice attached to it.

Some of my very best friends have gotten the worst cracks.

If you do not believe me, ask Drev.

Link Orr has been out to see Tom Orr, eh? "Hay," did you say, Drev?

It's dollars to doughnuts, its after White Wyandottes, he went.

Or a job to judge at St. Louis.

Gee whiz! Do I understand, Mr. R. P. Journal, that we will have to give the name of the breeder?

If I buy a bird from Tom, Dick or Harry will I have to put his name on the entry blank?

Golly, but what a lot of "fibs" will be sent in!

Better have an affidavit, Col. Mills, and make them deliberately lie.

Says, Thos. Supt. Orr, are you standing for this?

Just imagine any one of the big and little exhibitors says, "Mr. So and So bred this bird."

Well, I guess not.

You can lead a horse to water, but you cannot make him drink.

Cut it out, Col. Mills, and save the boys from lying.

You can bet your sweet potatoes that "Yours truly" will flunk on that rule.

Curtis is getting hot on what the A. P. A. is going to do in the future.

NUTWOOD FARMS,

R.F. D. No. 4, Syracuse, N. Y

I hope it will not be busy trying to smooth over places he has made rocky.

The A. P. A. will be doing good work after all us sardines are gone, and don't you forget it.

Mr. J. H. Robinson has done us more good than Hewes, Curtis, Kimmey, et al.

Say, John, you have no better friend in the business than I am.

I enjoyed your biography, also your phiz; it's a dandy.

It's to be continued, I see. But don't make it tiresome.

I also note your editorial, "All in Due Course."

While I am not familiar at the present writing with the constitution of the A. P. A., I am of the opinion that local associations can become members, just as you state.

I agree with you right down in my heart that we should have state, county and, if possible, local poultry associations.

The Grange would perhaps be a good thing to copy, eh?

The more people we could get interested the better off we all would be.

There is no need of giving up the life members.

Let us get to work and get the local and state organizations to join and throw their weight in the right direction.

I am sure we new members will be glad to push on toward that which is best.

The old members will have to get in line or fall by the wayside.

And the most graceful thing for Mr. J. H. Robinson to do is to join the A. P. A., and "West Point" will sign his death warrant.

If we all could be born over again and born right, wouldn't is be fine!

Curtis is back, I hear.

Say, Essex or Curtis, give us some more cartoons. They are liked by all the folks.

Better than scrapping with Hewes.

Wonder what those "Three Sardines of Tom Orr" are going to put up for an entertainment?

Since cock fighting has been stopped, Hewes and Curtis cannot appear.

Think the A. P. A. ought to hold their meeting on the 28th as a part of the entertainment.

Well, I have nothing sharp this week. Be good, but don't be a sardine.

WEST POINT.

THE BREEDING OF TURKEYS.

Turkeys are hatched with a yellowish tip on their beaks, which it is necessary to remove with a pin during the first days of their birth. They are very susceptible to cold and damp even when they are of a good age. They should only be exposed to the open air in fine weather, by shutting up the mother under a wicker basket, slightly raised so as to allow the little ones to enter at their pleasure. If they become wet, it is necessary to dry them directly, and to give them a little warm wine.

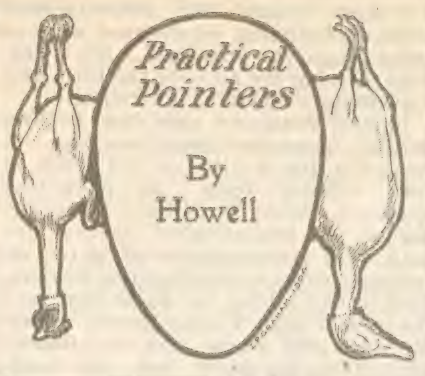
The most favorable time for breeding turkeys is in the month of May. The food is composed to bread soaked in wine or mixed with hard-boiled eggs. It is necessary to make them swallow the nourishment by force, as their stupidity is so great that they would neglect to take it. At the end of eight days one gives to them a mixture of dressed salad, consisting of nettles, peas, groats boiled in milk, oats, and wheat. Little by little one prepares less food for them, in order that they may go and eat the herbage in the neighborhood. After twenty-days one gives them a little absinthe or milk curdled in salad.

The most critical period for turkeys is when they take the red—that is, when the small glands commence to develop. It is necessary then to nourish them with fortifying things such as fennell, parsley, hempseed, and cooked and salted meat.

A very dangerous and contagious disease which attacks turkeys is caused by pimples or postules, which grow in the throat, on the beak, and on all exterior parts devoid of feathers. In order to preserve other birds from the contagion, it is necessary to isolate the ailing turkey. It should be given some wine and tonic food. Turkeys are, like fowls, subject to roup, gout, indigestion, and diarrhoea.

Turkeys should be taken out into the fields, but they should only be let out after the the dew has been dried up by the sun, and there should always be a shelter near in case of rain.

When it is desired to fatten turkeys, they should be fed on acorns, chestnuts, walnuts, and meals. One finishes fattening them by giving them daily some chestnuts and walnuts, at first twenty, and then progressively up to nearly 150 a day. If one mixes with their food a little meal, their flesh acquires more flavor. It is necessary that the meal should be chopped very fine and made into a paste. If the meal is cooked, so much the better.—Le Messager Litteraire.



CAN'T MISS IT.

Editor American Fancier:

I would just as soon miss my daily paper as miss my weekly American Fancier. Your subscriber and well-wisher,

JAMES M. KIRDY.

Wilkinsburg, Pa., July 25, 1904.

Mr. Howell, associate editor of The American Fancier, will furnish weekly reports on the egg and poultry market, and answer all questions submitted to him relating to commercial and practical poultry keeping. When replies are requested to be sent by letter, stamps must be enclosed and letters addressed to George E. Howell, 70 Christopher St., New York City.

Eggs.—Receipts for week, 78,000 cases. When the shipments average 13,000 cases daily, the price drags, such was the state of the market for the past week. Nearby marks with a reputation to back them, have reached quotations and in some cases a slight premium above, the general stock has sold under quotations, rather than level with them. We quote:

Fancy New York state and near by white, 24c.; mixed, same quality, 22c.; fair to good, 21 to 22c. per dozen. Fancy candled western, 20c.; best extras, 19c.; southern, 14 to 17½c. per dozen.

Poultry.—Receipts for week, 32 cars live and 8,600 pkgs. dressed poultry. With larger arrivals of spring chickens, prices dropped to 16c. for best live springers. We quote: Chickens, near by and western fancy, 15 to 16c. per lb., live weight; fowls, 12½c.; turkeys, 10c. per lb.; pigeons, 25c. per pair.

Dressed fowls, best, 12½c.; broilers, Phila. fancy, 23 to 25; other nearby, 16 to 18c. per lb.; fresh killed turkeys, 14 to 15c.; spring ducks, 15 to 15½c. per lb.; squabs, white, $2.50; dark, $1.50; mixed, $2.25 per dozen.

A subscriber asks, "Why not have in your columns, advertisements of good poultry commission men, to whom surplus market stock could be sent?"

In reply would say The American Fancier will be grateful to any subscriber who knows a reliable commission house, and can secure their advertising patronage for us.

I have often wondered why those seeking shipments of poultry and eggs did not use the advertising columns of the poultry papers more? Perhaps my personal experience with one of the big western papers some years ago will serve as an answer as well as any. I had been using several of the foremost agricultural journals for a year or so and conceived the idea of trying a monthly poultry paper, and wrote them. The answer I got I considered nothing less than an insult to my business integrity and I dropped them on the spot. Possibly the experience of others has been the same. Shipping to middlemen is not the most satisfactory way to dispose of surplus stock at all times, but as our correspondent infers, we need them. While there are great rogues in the ranks, there are also honest men.

Should any reader be unable to dispose of his surplus stock for lack of a middle man, let him ask his express agent to get him the names of a few reliable commission men at the point he wishes to consign his products.

I expect the following will be in the "seen before" class, but I reason much the same as when candling eggs. If the quality is tip top it adds zest to the work, so each time when I see an account of a particularly successful agriculturist, fruit grower or poultryman, I become interested, for I realize that it is along the lines of intensive farming and paying attention to the small details that is going to contribute to the success of the agriculturally employed people in the future.

In every orchard and truck patch, and on every dairy farm, poultry raising can be carried on successfully and profitably, without curtailing the other operations.

Under the new system of delivering only the cream portion of the product from a dairy farm, the skim milk is kept on the farm and can be fed to laying hens and growing chicks with wonderfully beneficial results and large profits in eggs and meat.

On a fruit and berry farm, flocks of fowl can be colonized at convenient points, where they may roam about under the trees and follow the freshly turned furrows, absorbing all insect life with immense benefits.

In the truck patch the adult fowls must be confined, but the chicks can roam at their own sweet will if the seed beds are protected, and form the nucleus of an auxiliary profit of no mean proportion.

Speaking of fencing, the slickest thing in portable fences is a rough board ten inches wide with uprights attached at intervals of five feet and extending two feet above the top of the board. Cover this with two inch mesh wire netting two feet wide and you have a fence you can take down and put up in a minute and turn chicks until they reach the broiler age or even longer.

We have before us the prospectus of The Roseland Poultry-Keepers' Co-operative Assn., Roseland, N. C. The objects of the association are, to encourage the development of the local poultry industry, to reduce the cost of production to a minimum, to place on the market eggs that will command a premium, to secure the little fellow the same advantages as the big one, and to help persons with poor health to earn a living.

All are worthy endeavors, both from a business and charitable view, and show the spirit of co-operation is rampant in the poultry business.

Some of the rules for the society are excellent, others are ridiculous and superfluous and if adhered to will cheapen the influence of the society from a business standpoint. For instance, unless Roseland is a colony of consumptives, the fact that an attendant, although barred from so doing by the rules, should forget himself and spit where the poultry run the value of the eggs will not be affected.

Again it says, all eggs must be kept standing on end. They are not supposed to be kept in any position, but hustled off to market.

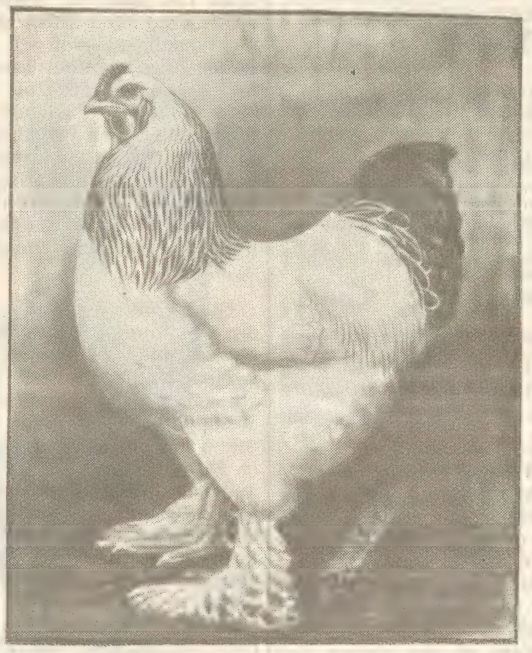
THE INDIAN RUNNER DUCK.

An altogether different type of duck from any previously described is the Indian Runner. It is supposed to be of eastern origin, and the term runner is applied to it because the natural pace of the bird is a run, not the usual walk or waddle common to most ducks. The Runner is a small breed, averaging about 4½lb in weight in the drake, and rather less in the duck. The birds should carry themselves very erect, should be lengthy and close feathered. The legs should be set well back, but should be well under the body. The fawn-and-white Runner is the popular variety, and the one that it is advisable to keep, though there are grey-and-white, and pure whites to be met with. The two latter varieties, however, seem to be dropping in oblivion, in this country at any rate. The bill should be long and wedge-shaped, the head flat and long, with the eyes set well up. In young birds the bill is yellow, but with age it assumes a green hue. The head should be fawn in color on the top and cheeks, with a narrow white line dividing the cap from the cheek markings, and from the bill. The fawn on the head should match that on the body as nearly as possible, but usually the head marks err on the side of darkness. The neck should be lengthy and fine, and should be pure white down to where it meets the shoulders. At this point the fawn should join the white evenly and abruptly all round, and should be continued well under and around the bird, ending underneath in a straight line across the abdomen and running down the back to the tail. The wings should be fawn, but furnished with white flights, and the legs should be colored orange yellow. The above description fits the fawn Runner, but for the grey variety it is only necessary to substitute gray for fawn.

The fawn Runner, properly marked, is a very handsome bird, and has found great favor with the exhibitor, and may therefore be taken up by anyone wishing for distinction in the show pen. The breed is very hardy, and forages to perfection. For utility purposes it holds a special position, being a layer far in excess of any of the larger breeds; indeed, for laying purposes it may be compared in point of the number of eggs produced with the ordinary hen—with this important difference: the domestic hen lays best during spring and summer, while the Runner naturally starts to lay about October, and continues right through the winter. At all times the eggs will sell at the same rate as hens' eggs, and at a better price during the hatching season. The Runner is a non-sitter, though occasionally a duck may go broody, just as will sometimes a fowl of a non-sitting breed. One point about the Runner deserves special notice, and that is, that swimming water is not necessary to ensure fertility of its eggs, therefore, so long as water can be provided for drinking purposes, the birds may be confidently kept for breeding.

As a selling table duck the Indian Runner is at present not in demand, though if wanted for the home table no better breed could be kept, the flesh being delicious, and the carcases plump and meaty. Many consider the flesh of the Runner to be the best tasted of any of the domestic duck breeds.

The young are as easy to rear as the young of any variety, and though small do not lack hardiness and ability to forage. They should be reared on grass, if possible; if not, they should be given greenstuff liberally. When the birds are required for autumn laying the time to set is in March. For the home table the birds may be confidently killed, if properly fed, at the age of ten weeks. Personally, I believe that at some future time the breed will be in brisk demand for table.



At the present time there seems to be an effort on the part of exhibitors to depart from the original fawn, and to approach more nearly the color to be met with on the yellow dun. This is a step in the wrong direction.—J. T. Bird in Poultry, England.

AMERICAN BREEDS.

The difference in opinion as to which is the best breed of poultry can never be settled to the satisfaction of all. If a man has a particular preference for any breed, that is the one breed with which he will be the most successful. Love of occupation and a "fancy" for a particular breed are two prime factors in successful poultry keeping. "Fancy," merely for the novelty or fad of the thing, in this country has but few followers. Even the multi-millionaires who have elaborate poultry establishments managed by experts, rarely ever keep such breeds as are classed as strictly fancy. They select almost invariably those breeds that may be said to combine beauty and utility. The American poultryman aims for practical results. "Fuss and feathers" may be well enough, and pleasing to the eyes, but they will expect and secure something more substantial. All pure breeds, in a sense, are attractive in looks. In England the poultry fanciers go to greater extremes in fancy points on breeds.

Take as an illustration the Asiatic breeds. The excessive leg and toe feathering, including stiff vulture hocks—the admired English type—is produced "show no daylight" from the body to the feet between the legs of the specimen. Breeding to these extremes results in a lessening of egg production, and it is no unusual thing to see in the English show reports "hen so and so" sterile. The Asiatics as bred by American fanciers are not so profuse with leg and toe feathering, consequently the eggs are more numerous and possess a better percentage of fertility.

American fanciers import pure breeds of fowls, and with a few years of American breeding they are evolved into breeds possessing increased utility value and at the same time their characteristic pure-bred markings or points are maintained. The light Brahma is to-day looked upon as strictly an American production. Its English counterpart is a much coarser-boned fowl, more heavily feathered on the toe and leg, and of a smaller egg-producing capacity.

The breeds most popular in this country and the ones that are more generally kept, those that are making the most profitable returns, are what are known as the American breeds. They consist of the Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes. They are the business breeds that furnish the market with broilers, roasters and, in fact, all general poultry products.

In recent years a new American breed has been evolved called the "Rhode Island Reds." They are of the blocky type of the Wyandottes. They are said to possess good utility qualities. Like all new breeds, they are boomed as "wonders," but all such claims must be taken with the proverbial grains of salt. The only true test of any breed is the experience that time gives. At present the Reds vary considerably in their plumage colors, though there are some strains that produce birds of quite uniform colors.

Probably the barred Plymouth Rock is more widely disseminated than any other breed. The white Wyandotte of late years has, however, been rapidly coming to the front and is the most formidable rival the barred Plymouth Rock has, if it does not already equal it in popularity.

The Plymouth Rock family consists of the barred, white and buff. The barred are probably more extensively bred than any other variety of pure bred fowls. The whites are rapidly growing in favor. Difficulty of breeding the buffs to the required standard color has kept them back. During the past two years at the shows the buffs have been remarkably good classes.

The Wyandotte breed are the golden, silver, black, white, buff and partridge. Naturally the white is the most popular. Buff breeds of all kinds are difficult to breed to the required standard color and on that account will probably never be as popular as the whites.

The carcass of the well-bred Wyandotte is very plump and blocky; well-rounded on the breast, broad through the sides, short but broad across the back. The Plymouth Rocks when dressed present the same appearance, except that they are somewhat longer on the backs and not quite as broad on the breast, having a deeper or longer body. Both breeds should show clean, rich yellow legs. When the white Wyandotte is bred with what is known as a dead white plumage—that which is free from yellow tinge—the color of the legs will not be as rich orange yellow as the specimens showing a slight yellow tinge in the under color.

The Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes are properly classed as good "all-around breeds." With proper housing they are excellent winter layers, and it is from winter eggs that the profit in poultry is mainly derived. The hens make excellent sitters and first-class mothers, and it is not a rare thing for the hens to commence laying after they are with the chicks three or four weeks. The chicks are hardy, rapid growers, and for that reason should have a well-varied diet to aid them in making flesh, muscle, bone and feathers at one and the same time. Some of the barred Plymouth Rock chicks occasionally show an inclination to be very slow in feathering. Do not be alarmed, for such chicks will be of good size. Shady runs should, of course, be accessible, or such specimens will sunburn almost to the blistering or peeling stage. The white Plymouth Rocks appear to completely feather much sooner than the barred, which fact often causes the white chicks to appear to be larger at the same age. The scales will, however, quickly prove that the barred chick of the same age is often the heavier.

One advantage in raising pure-bred fowls is the uniformity of the specimens as well as the color and size of the eggs. These factors are important where poultry products are sent in quantity to market. It is claimed by many that the Barred Plymouth Rock is always ready for the table from the time it is six weeks old, as it does not appear to have any scrawny or lanky stage of growth, which is characteristic with some of the Asiatics or heavier breeds. The White Wyandottes can well be said to rival the Rocks in all these points. Some strains of White Rocks lay eggs a trifle larger than the Barred. There is, however, quite a marked difference in strains of pure-bred fowls of all kinds. Some poultry men select hens with a special idea of improving egg-laying and size of eggs. The fact is that the utility side of a breed can be as greatly improved as the fancy side. American fanciers have also proved that utility and fancy points—characteristic pure-bred markings—can be improved together without any detriment to either.

Occasionally there are breeders who do too much forcing and to such an extent that the size and weight of the American breeds are increased considerably over standard requirements. Whenever such is the case the specimens lose in other respects more than is gained. In fact, nothing is gained, as the standard weight requirements are sufficient to secure the proper size without undue forcing. It will be found that the most profitable results come from the hens of all the weight class breeds that are a little under the standard weights. In a sense, show requirements in weight are not the best condition for results in the poultry yard. It is difficult to keep heavy hens in good egg-laying condition. They are apt to become sluggish. The active hen is almost invariably the one that is in just good condition, with no semblance of the "down behind" coming. It requires good sense as well as good food to keep a flock of hens in good, healthy condition during the various seasons. No set of rules can be given to govern various flocks, as each has different surroundings and conditions. The only general rules that can well be followed are cleanliness everywhere—in the houses, runs and vessels used for drink, furnishing good outdoor shade during hot weather, occupation during cold weather in the scratching shed, avoiding undue crowding at any time, giving a varied diet of clean, wholesome food, never using damaged grain or food of any kind, removing sick fowls from the flocks at once and keeping down insect pests. All these things are simply business requirements, factors on which success hinges. Side-track treatment brings only side-track results, and the usual finish that follows all neglect will soon come around to the poultry keeper who does not keep in close touch with his work.

LET THE HENS SIT.

To prevent a hen from sitting is not difficult, and no cruelty need be inflicted. Usually a hen sits when she becomes very fat, though the rule is not infallible. She must feel the warmth under her when she is on the nest; in other words, she must impart warmth to something, which may be an egg, a stone, or anything, but if the cool air can be made to circulate under her she at once becomes disgusted. If a coop about eighteen inches square and twenty-four inches high is used for confining her, the bottom and sides being of lath, and the coop raised two inches or more from the ground, she will have a coop space under her, especially if the lath pieces and one inch apart on the bottom. During the process of incubation a hen requires but little food, as her body is then usually well supplied with fat, and she sometimes leaves her nest only two or three times during a whole week. If allowed food, the best ration is an ounce of lean meat once a day, as grain will be of no advantage to a sitter. It pays to allow hens to hatch and care for broods, for they will lay as many eggs during the year as when "broken up." It is natural for hens to rest from laying, and incubation is the best method of allowing them to again get in good laying condition.—Farm and Fireside.

THEY OWN THEIR OWN COOPS.

The Lancaster County, Pa., Poultry and Pigeon Association have purchased through an advertisement in the American Fancier 900 exhibition coops from the Empire Cooping Co., of Fultonville, N. Y. These coops were formerly owned and used by the New York State Fair Association and are fine, first-class coops. The Lancaster County Association will now be in a position to coop 1,500 birds at their second annual show during the last week of the year, and from present indications all this room will be needed. The show will be held at Lititz, Pa., and will undoubtedly be the leading show of the Keystone State. Specials in cash and merchandise (which will be exchanged for cash if desired) will be the leading feature of the show. They will be so placed that all exhibitors, whether large or small, will have a chance to win some of them. Those veteran poultry and pigeon fanciers, F. G. Bean of Collegeville, Pa., and H. A. Koons of Allentown, Pa., will place the awards. Elmer E. Kantz is president and John W. Bruckart is secretary of this hustling young association.

A LESSON FOR ADVERTISERS.

From the Razoo Poultry Journal.

The picture we give this week represents the hind view of Mr. Whiskers Gall. Last month we gave his front view. Next month we shall have a fine illustration of his baby brother, who has just started to breed the "best on earth" Blue Mongolians. Although scarcely three years old, this fine fancier has beaten all comers. But his name being Gall, results are obvious. Other advertisers may well take this as a lesson in advertising and do likewise. Get in the band wagon, claim the earth, shame the devil. We are with you.

Just allow me to express my appreciation of the American Fancier of the half a dozen poultry journals I subscribe for. I would rather give up the whole bunch than give up the American Fancier. HAGERSTOWN HONORS ARE BREAD WINNERS!

LEST WE FORGET: THE GREAT HAGERSTOWN FAIR TAKES PLACE

OCT. 11-12-13-14, '04.

The poultry buildings are the largest in the United States.
The cash prizes are the most liberal offered.
A prize won at Hagerstown is equivalent to one received at New York, Boston, Chicago, or any other great winter show.
It takes good birds to win at Hagerstown for the competion is not local—it is national.
It is a fanciers' show from end to end. Visiting fanciers are "at home" at all times.
The annual parade and banquet are the great features that bring "the clans."
Honors won are bread winners. They sell the stock.
Seven men judge the show, viz: G. O. Brown, J. H. Drevenstedt, D. A. Nichols, F. B. Zimmer, J. F. Craugle, Theodore Hewes and W. J. Stanton.
These men have judged before.
Premium lists will be ready August 1st.
The money you win is ready before you go.

If there is anything else you desire to know write to

JOHN L. COST, Mgr., Hagerstown, Md.

BARRED AND BUFF ROCKS.

I have won the past season at the following shows: Fitchburg, Mass., Stamford, Conn., South Framingham, Mass., Manchester, N. H., New Bedford, Mass. The above Barred Cockerels were all sired by 3d cockerel, 1903, Madison Square Garden, New York winner, 63 cockerels in this class. Reliable Poultry Journal February, 1903, liked this cockerel above all others in the show. I have a few cockerels sired by above cockerel for sale from $4.00 upwards. Standard weight of very even color, barred well all over. If you want to improve your blood these cockerels are what you want. Money returned if birds don't suit you. I have had my pens mated up by one of the leading Poultry Judges in America—4 pens headed by high scoring cockerels. I have also one pen of Buff Rocks. For the cockerel in this pen and two pullets I gave Mr. Higgins, of Orange, Mass., $75. I have not many sittings to dispose of therefore have your orders booked early. My eggs will be from same pens as I breed from myself. Choicest Eggs $2.00 a sitting.

HALDIE NICHOLSON, LEOMINSTER MASS

GEYER'S SCURVY CURE FOR POULTRY was the first article introduced to the public for this purpose, which has been thoroughly tested in the last ten years by many of our brother fanciers who are willing to say with us that there is no other article on the market like this that can be relied on to do its work properly. It is something that the poultry fancier, who appreciates his fine birds, needs very much. What looks more disgraceful than a fine flock of chickens, many, or all of them, having their legs coated with a thick, hard, scabby crust which is called scurvy? It spoils the appearance of the birds and is very annoying to them. It is also contagious. Here we have a sure cure for this ugly disease. By following the directions we guarantee that it will take off that ugly, hard coat and leave the legs clean and smooth and give them their natural color. It also has no equal for healing sores and frosted combs and wattels. It makes them very bright and red. It is just what the exhibitor wants to prepare his birds for the exhibition room. Some of our customers tell us that they have tried it with good results for weak legs. We only ask you to give it a trial. It is put up in tin boxes. Money must accompany all orders. Price, 25 cents. Address, G. A. Geyer, Florin, Pa. 560tf

TURKEYS

Standard Varieties and Management.

By T. F. McGrew,

In Farmers' Bulletin No. 200, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

No other kind of domestic poultry has come into such general use throughout the entire world for Thanksgiving and holiday feasts as has the turkey. Records show that in England, in 1541, it was enumerated among the dainties, while in 1573 it had become the customary fare of the farmer. W. B. Tegetmeier, F. Z. S., in the poultry book issued in London (1867), says of the domestic turkey:

Every author who has written on the subject, since the days of Linnaeous, has considered it to be derived from the well-known wild turkey of North America; but on account of the great differences which are met with among our domestic turkeys, and the strains of the wild turkeys recently imported from North America not readily associating or pairing with them, I have for years past entertained a contrary opinion.

This writer is probably in error regarding the failure of the wild turkeys of North America to pair with the domestic turkeys, as Audubon has recorded the coming of wild turkeys into the barnyard, where they paired with his domestic turkeys. It is also well known that the American Bronze turkey originated from the union of the wild turkey of North America with the domestic turkey of this country.

Mr. Tegemeier quotes from the writings of Prof. Spencer Baird and others to show that the early scientific authorities on ornithological subjects believed that there existed at one time a distinct variety, the original of our domestic turkey; that this was indigenous to the West Indian Islands, and was transferred as tamed to Mexico; that it was taken thence to Europe in 1520; and that ultimately the wild original was exterminated by the natives. Whether or not this view is correct will probably never be satisfactorily settled. It is the generally accepted view at the present time that all the turkeys of the world have descended in some way or other from the three forms known as the North American, the Mexican, and the Honduras, or Ocellated turkey.

North American wild turkey—This is the original species of the Eastern United States, known as Meleagris americana, whose colors are black, beautifully shaded with a rich bronze, the breast plumage being dark bronze, illuminated with a lustrous finish of coppery gold. This finish of bronze and gold emblazons the entire plumage throughout as if burnished into brightness. In the rays of the sun it shows a most beautiful combination of bronze, black, copper, and gold.

Mexican turkey.—The wild turkey of the southern, or Mexican, country, called by some naturalists Meleagris mexicana, is somewhat shorter in shank than the northern species, in body color metallic-black shaded with bronze, its tail and other feathers being tipped with white. This appears to be the species that was first taken to Spain and other European countries. It is also thought that the white markings of the plumage of this fowl show its influence on the variety of domestic turkeys known as the Narragansett.

Black Rose Comb Bantam Female.

Black Rose Comb Bantam Male.

Ocellated turkey.—The wild species known as the Honduras turkey—scientifically as Meleagris ocellata—was originally a native of Honduras and other parts of Central America. Some describe it as most beautiful in coloring, equal to the Impeyan pheasant, if not richer. The head and neck of this wild variety are naked and no breast tuft is present. The caruncles of the head and neck differ somewhat from those of other turkeys. The ground color of the plumage is described as of a beautiful bronze-green, banded with gold bronze, blue, and red, with some bands of brilliant black. It is to be deplored that this variety can not be bred successfully as a domestic fowl in the northern climate. The writer can not learn that it has ever been successfully bred outside of its native heath.

Crested turkeys.—While not a recognized variety, there are seen at times turkeys with crests, or topknots. This seems to be rather a freak than a natural appendage. In the crested fowls, known as the Polish family among chickens, there is an unusual skull formation which naturally belongs to this breed. But with the turkeys (and ducks as well) the crest seems to be an unnatural growth. There are but few of these to be seen at the present time.

There is apparently no contention regarding the original transportation of the turkeys from America to Spain between the years 1518 and 1526. It also seems to be admitted that they were introduced into England in 1524. Among the earliest recorded varieties of domestic turkeys we find the Black Norfolk and the large Cambridge turkey. Undoubtedly the turkey had been domesticated in this country prior to the recording of these varieties in England.

Recent improvement.—The growing of turkeys seems to have improved within the last few years as a result of a determined effort on the part of producers of what is termed standard-bred, or exhibition, stock to demonstrate that it is more profitable to use purebred breeding stock than the smaller and less vigorous stock of days gone by. Their efforts to introduce throughout the country the several standard varieties of turkeys has greatly benefited the turkey-growing industry of this country. This effort has supplied rich, new, vigorous blood throughout the whole country, adding strength and vigor to innumerable flocks, and thereby, to some extent, building up the stock that had become deteriorated through the carelessness and inattention of the producers themselves.

Deterioration through inbreeding.—The fact that one fecundation is sufficient to render fertile all the eggs of one laying has made possible the undermining of the health and vigor of the present-day domestic turkey. Being advised of this, hundreds of people depend upon their neighbors' flocks for the services of a male and pay no attention to the matter of breeding stock except to keep one or two turkey hens. This has reduced many of the turkeys throughout the country almost to a condition of imbecility. The lack of vigor in a large portion of the breeding stock throughout the country has jeojardized to a certain extent the production of a sufficient number of market turkeys to supply the demand. In fact, not fully realizing that their failure was largely due to undermining the vitality of their breeding stock through inbreeding, people have become so disheartened in some localities with the meagre results of their efforts to grow turkeys for market that they have desisted from the attempt.

Throughout the country the attention of turkey growers has been called to the successful production of market turkeys in the State of Rhode Island. Unquestionably some of the best market turkeys produced in the world have been sent out of Rhode Island. But even there the art was in danger of being lost through the careless handling of breeding stock. If those most interested in the turkey crop of that state had not put forth an unusual effort to introduce plenty of new vigorous stock, they would not have been in a much better state at the present time than growers in many other localities.

There never has been a more active demand for market turkeys than during the past ten years, and there is no reason why this should not increase very materially in the next few years as a result of the growth of population.

Recent prices.—The market statistics show that there has been an active demand for turkeys for many years past. The records of the winter of 1903-04 perhaps shows the highest prices that have ever been paid for the turkey crop, which seems to have been considerably less in proportion to the demand than for several years past. The wholesale prices paid in the Western States ranged from 10 to 15 cents a pound, dressed, with the head, feet, and entrails. The average wholesale price as recorded in New York for the past ten years has ranged from 8 to 20 cents a pound. Boston shows a valuation higher than this in a few instances only, and the Chicago market has recorded from 6 to 18 cents. In considering these figures one must always remember that the best quality of stock can always be sold at good paying prices, while for poor, ill-favored stock one must accept whatever price can be got.

Census of 1900.—The census of 1900 shows that, with a little over 5,000,000 farms in the United States, not much over 6,500,000 turkeys were produced. Among the States, Texas is in the lead, having produced almost 650,000 turkeys. Following Texas come Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Ohio, and Indiana, in the order named. The State of Rhode Island produced less than 5,000 turkeys. It may be remarked, however, that if all the turkeys were of such good quality as those produced in Rhode Island, their value would be nearly doubled and they would return correspondingly greater profits to the grocers. It is quite as easy to grow turkeys of superior quality as it is to grow those of inferior quality. Rhode Island turkeys sold at retail in the markets of New York City and Boston during Thanksgiving and holiday weeks of the past winter for as high as 38 and 40 cents a pound, while other turkeys could be bought at 20 to 25 cents. This gives some idea of the willingness of people to pay a good price for the best.

Cost of production and chance of profits.—It is claimed that, in the West and Southwest under ordinarily good conditions, turkeys can be grown and sold at 8 to 8½ cents a pound, live weight, and return a profit to the growers. When the possibility of an advance of 3 or 4 cents per pound is considered it will readily been seen that there is a change for good profits. In addition to this there is an opportunity for smaller growers who live near towns and villages to dress and sell their turkeys to private customers at the local retail prices. All admit that, if it were not for the unnatural losses that have been sustained in the past few years, much more profit could be made from growing turkeys. These losses are largely chargeable to conditions that may be removed by following the laws of nature in selecting and pairing the breeding stock.

Turkeys compared with other live stock.—There is no other kind of live stock that will return so large a profit to the successful producer as will poultry, and no kind of poultry is more profitable than turkeys when properly handled. The fact that turkeys will, from the time they are six weeks old until winter sets in, gain the greater part of their entire living from bugs, grasshoppers, and waste grain that they pick up in their wanderings over the range, assures their existence through this period at little or no cost to the grower. In other words, they may be termed self-sustaining foragers when they have sufficient range.

Increased demand for turkeys.—The chance for profit in the production of turkeys is gradually improving as a result of a more general use of the flesh. They are now used not only for roasting, but to an increasing extent as cold cuts for sandwiches and for salads, and large numbers of poults are used for broilers. Late-hatched poults do well for this purpose, and, while there can not be much opportunity for growing poults to maturity when they are hatched late in the season, they may be sold for broilers at a good profit. No dish is more valued in our large cities at the present time than the broiled poult.

Preferred weights for market.—Turkeys that are hatched early in the spring should grow to weigh from 14 to 20 pounds by Thanksgiving week. These weights are often exceeded by the best growers, but as they are the most popular and most readily produced, they are suggested as the most advisable. The average yield of turkey hens is from 18 to 30 eggs, each of which can usually be counted on to produce a living poult. The question of profit from keeping turkeys simply resolves itself into the ability of the grower to bring them to a marketable size. This can readily be done if care and attention be given to all the requirements for success.

The Spaniards have the credit of taking the turkey from Mexico to Europe. Mr. Dixon says that they first reached England in 1525. From the Mexican variety the turkeys of England were bred, and what is known in England as the Norfolk variety we call the Black turkey. Quite likely this variety came from England to us, and was used as the foundation for the cross with our wild turkeys to establish or create the Bronze turkey. Aubudon says that to his own knowledge the wild turkeys would come from their haunts and feed and breed with the domestic or tame turkeys, and the half-bred birds were finer in size and hardier in constitution than the domestic stock. To this day we strengthen the blood line of our Bronze turkey by making a cross with the wild turkey. The influence of the light markings of the Mexican turkey is shown in the plumage of some of our domestic varieties.

Six standard varieties.—Six standard varieties of turkeys are more or less grown in this country, viz: Bronze, Narragansett, Buff, Slate, White, and Black. The main differences are in size and color of plumage. The Bronze and Narragansett are the largest, the Buff and Slate are the medium, and the Black and White the smallest. Of late so much improvement in size has been made in the Whites that they have moved up to contend for third position, some of them having passed the 30-pound mark. The same statement may soon be made of the Blacks, as they have greatly improved during the last few years.

In addition to the foregoing there is a non-standard variety known as the Bourbon Reds. They might well claim the position now held by the Buff turkeys, being quite like them and more largely grown for market than are the Buffs. There is scarcely enough preference shown in the open market for any one of these varieties for table use to cause it to be favored in production of turkeys for market. There is, however, a strong preference at all times for the best grown and best finished specimens of all varieties. In Rhode Island, where the highest quality is produced, there does not seem to be much preference for any particular variety.

Origin of varieties.—Our domestic turkeys have all been bred from the wild turkey of the United States and Canada and the wild turkey of Mexico. Climatic conditions have prevented the Honduras, or Ocellated, turkey from playing any considerable part in bringing the domestic turkey to its present state of development. The wild turkey of North America has for the most part been used as the foundation from which size and vigor in our domestic stock have been gained. The lighter shades of color found in the Mexican turkey may have lent their aid in the markings of the Narragansett. As to the origin of the White variety, nothing that may be classed as authentic is recorded. The Blacks may have come from either of the wild varieties as sports, and the same may be said of the Whites. We know that white individuals have come as sports from both the Bronze and the Narragansett varieties. Such sports do not have the pink shank that is demanded in true-bred Hollands, but, when crossed with them, may be brought within color demands through selection.

American Fancier,
Johnstown, N. Y.

Dear Sirs:—Some of the prominent Orpington breeders have written me, requesting that I withdraw my patronage from the "Fancier" because of Rumbold's article published March 19.

I was really glad to have the "Fancier" back at its old home again and heartily wish it the best of success with "Drev." at the helm and don't like to withdraw my ad., as it has always given satisfactory results, hence I enclose a reply to Mr. R. which please insert in next issue of "Fancier," and perhaps the parties I mentioned will decide to remain with you.

Yours truly,
CHAS. BENNINGTON.

YAKOB PILSENER.

Hoboken, N. J.

TO SPECIALTY CLUBS AND THEIR MEMBERS.

It gives me much pleasure to note the earnest work that has been done by the officers of many of our leading Specialty Clubs to bring out a large exhibit of their favorites at the World's Fair, St. Louis, October next.

The prestige of any variety is largely measured by the general public by the estimate the financiers of the variety themselves put upon it. In other words its place in the public's estimation depends to a great extent upon the size and quality of its exhibits at such shows as this.

Personally, I very much regret that a few specialty club officials have felt themselves offended because the specials they offered did not find a place in the Official Premium List. A little investigation would have shown them that long ago the management announced that specials from private individuals, or specials that bore the marks of advertising could not be accepted.

It is not too late to place other specials, coming as all should, from the specialty clubs. They can still be announced in the poultry journals of September and thus reach prospective exhibitors before entries close, Sept, 10th. A president, secretary or executive committee who is not willing to assume some responsibility in an emergency of this kind, but who will allow such an opportunity to pass unimproved, is hardly worthy of such a position, and it not likely to be forgiven by the members of his club when next annual meeting occurs.

You can announce your specials as "Open to the World" or can limit them as "Open to Club Members Only," and thus use this as an argument to increase your membership before the show begins, which will be October 24th.

You will simplify matters if you announce that the specials will follow the awards of the regular exposition judges, and thus give specials to say to 1st, 2d and 3d Cock, same for Hen, Cockerel, Pullet and Pen.

You may extend your specials to 5th, or eventh 7th, in each of these competitions, but please do not go lower than 7th, and 5th is still better.

It is much better to give $5 each for "Best Cock," "Best Hen," "Best Cockerel" and "Best Pullet" than to offer "$25 for Best Cock, Hen, Cockerel and Pullet." The latter award is always a hard one to place in a large show.

The special for a pen prize should be double that of a corresponding prize for a single specimen, and if you offer a display prize, our awards will be based on an allowance of twice as many points for a pen prize as for a corresponding single bird prize.

While the World's Fair announcements cannot take cognizance of the individuals who contribute the cash or the cups to the clubs, that would be an ungrateful club, indeed, which failed to give credit in its annual catalogue to those members who made the club's specials possible, and the poultry journals are always glad to recognize the individuals who are enterprising enough to come forward with these special offers, so we urge leading breeders to push this good work very promptly to the attention of their officers, feeling sure they will find themselves well rewarded for their enterprise in this direction.

Let no club official hold back longer in the expectation that certain specialty judges will be announced for their variety, nor let them make this a condition of their working up a list of club specials, for the management has announced that no judges will be engaged until after entries close.

Numerous specialty clubs have announced a meeting at St. Louis; see that yours does likewise.

Notice what the Barred P. Rock club has offered: $250 in cash; or the Buff P. Rock club, $250; the R. I. Red club, $125; Buff Wyandotte Club, $80; the American White Wyandotte club, $250; the National White Wyandotte club, $500; also good specials by a dozen other clubs. See that your favorites are not neglected.

All applications for premium lists or entry blanks should be make to Col. Charles F. Mills, Chief of Department of Live Stock, St. Louis, Mo.

Remember that a separate entry blank should be called for for each variety you wish to enter.

After August 20 all mail intended for the undersigned should be addressed to him in care of the Live Stock Department, Administration Building, St. Louis, Mo.

T. E. ORR, Supt. of Poultry.

TABASCO SAUCE.

Now look here, Mr. J. H. Drevenstedt, I thought The American Fancier was copyrighted?

That sardine who runs that sheet called "The Live Stock Tribune," of Los Angeles, California, is a robber.

He quoted that squib of mine about the Gen'l Slocum without giving the Fancier or me credit.

I have not been your editor-in-chief long, but if these guys are going to steal my writings without due credit there will be a hot time P. D. Q.

In the language of the marines I say, Torpedoes don't anchor.

Dave Nichols, I hear, is the champion bean eater in the fraternity, and the way he slid beans down his gullet put Cost in the shade with his shortcake.

There was a young man called Dave
Nickle,
Whose appetite is not very fickle,
To shortcake he said nit,
But baked beans were just it,
Which put his friend Welles in a pickle.

Just one month from to-day the judges for St. Louey will be announced.

And we will have to make out entries as Mr. Tom, Dick or Harry as breeder.

Quoting an old saying regarding that a person was heard to remark, "In the morning, gentlemen, in the morning."

A fresh young dude said, "Well, what about the morning?" His answer was:

"You can all go to thunder in the morning." Same about that breeder's entry.

They can all go to thunder with that rule.

Say, Tom Orr, when you get out to St. Louey just wipe that off the slate.

Suppose it is one of Theo. Hewes' pet schemes, or Curtis', as they both have borrowed birds.

Well, by gosh, Bates has fished out a lobster, too!

Guess I'll climb way up and fall off.

Say, Bates, this sardine you have just unpacked, is he of the Foy strain or just a mongrel?

Patrick Henry Jacobs, the old warhorse, is still doing stunts.

Well do I remember when I used to attend the A.P.A. meetings with papa. Pat was the life of the meetings.

It would pay the A. P. A. or that Com. of 3, Jr., to get Patsy out at St. Louey. Fun, you bet!

Say, Drev., those photos of Cost and Bumblefoot from Baltimore are good. Have some sardine every week on that page. It'll take O. K.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 13, 1904.

The following was received from a subscriber in New York: "As the 'Light Brahma Pullet' shown on page 7 of your issue of August 6, 1904, believes in male attire, I suggest to Mr. Rumbold that he name her 'Dr. Mary Walker.'" The point is well taken. But it is not Mr. Rumbold's fault; it is ours. Mr. Rumbold sent us a photograph of a handsome pullet and we assumed the cut he sent was that of a pullet. Instead he sent the cockerel and we put the right label on the wrong bird, or the wrong label on the right bird. This should right a wrong and exonerate the honorable secretary of the American Light Brahma Club. The cigars are on the editor of The American Fancier. This will probably give "West Point" a first-class opportunity to roast his employers and incidentally remove the blame from Mr. Rumbold, who seems to have been a target for more than one shot, public or private, of late.

We hear that Herr Johann Frederich Tallinger, of Polish and Wyandotte fame, had bought a fine farm near Rochester, N. Y., where he will remove to shortly and take up chicken and fruit culture in dead earnest. It is also whispered that he is interested in the revival of the once Great Western New York Fair, and report has it that John is slated for the secretaryship. If good, hard work, square dealing and hustling will fill the bill for that office, commend us to Herr Tallinger.

The poultry department at the Seneca County Fair, Waterloo, N. Y., September 27 to 29, promises to be unusually attractive this year, special efforts having been made to put it in the top row. Mr. W. D. Burall, 333 Third St., Brooklyn, N. Y., is the assistant secretary and has worked hard to bring the above about.

Mr. A. E. Blunck, who is known all over the States and Canada as a Game and Bantam breeder and exhibitor for the past ten or more years, has sold his plant, good will and large collection of choice fowl, old and young, to his brother, John C. Blunck of Johnstown, N. Y. John has had charge of Prospect Hill Farm a number of years, raised the birds and went on the road to exhibit them. He is a hard worker and a first-class showman. We wish him all kinds of luck in his new acquisition, for he is deserving of it.

"Al" Blunck, as he has been familiarly known in these parts for many years, sold his paper, "The Daily Republican," with plant and good will, recently. Last week he purchased "The Daily Call," the leading Republican paper of Lafayette, Indiana, and in the future he will be a Hoosier instead of a "New Yorker." The excellence of his daily paper of Johnstown and the county of Fulton is well known to all fair-minded newspapermen. It was one of the best of its kind published in the United States. We venture to say that "The Call" of Lafayette will soon feel the inspiring influence and magic touch of "Ye old editor of Fulton county." The American Fancier extends to him its sincere wishes for a most prosperous realization of his plans.

The special poultry "Premium List" issued by the Inter-State Fair, Trenton, N. J., has just reached us. It is a decided innovation and indicates the progressive spirit that moves the management of that great exhibition. The cover alone is a fine piece of work; the contents appeal to the best fanciers and exhibitors at once. It places Trenton in the front rank of Twentieth Century shows. It is well to remember that the entries at Trenton are limited to one thousand, as under no consideration will more than one bird be allowed in a coop, except where breeding pens are entered. Last year many entries were returned because they were received after entries had filled the coops. The cash premiums are very liberal and the entry fees reasonable. Mr. W. S. Gladney, Jr., Somers Point, N. J., will be glad to mail a copy of this list to intending exhibitors who will favor him with their addresses.

W. R. Curtiss & Co., Ransomville, N. Y., report great success in hatching their specialties, White Wyandottes and Pekin ducks, this season. Twenty thousand ducks and five thousand chickens is a very large crop, and the fact that all have done well is a fine illustration of the business methods pursued at Niagara Farms. The high quality of the stock is well known all over the United States and Canada.

The Hon. "Joe" Hilldorfer, Pittsburg, Pa., has been at the World's Fair, St. Louis, and in writing about the Model Poultry Farm, remarks: "It is small, but a nice plant, kept in good order, with some fine chickens to look at. But the people don't break their necks going in there, so you see it is a bad place to make any money." This is a candid expression of a straightforward fancier.

In the Poultry News for August we find the following comments by Editor Patrick Henry Jacobs:

Too Much Truth.—Seventy-five per cent. of prize winners never say a word. They can't advertise—no cash to spare.—Cor. American Fancier.

Certainly not; they don't have to. They get free advertising in the show awards given in poultry journals, and the regular advertiser pays the bills. The Poultry News has no space to waste on those who expect something for nothing.

As far as we are aware, the opinion of our correspondent was not influenced by the fact that the "priceless" fanciers he refers to get free advertising in the papers that do report the awards at shows in full. The editor of the Poultry News is simply reiterating what he said and believed when editor of the Poultry Keeper many years ago. He believed in giving the winnings or doings of advertisers only. That is the method pursued by trade organs as a rule. The American Fancier being a newspaper, cannot discriminate in favor of anybody when reporting shows. The readers demand this and we fail to see where the great free advertising comes in. Hundreds of young fanciers have started their advertising career in The American Fancier after seeing their winnings in print. Take the Feathered World of England. It reports all shows, names all exhibitors and even gives addresses. And yet it publishes in the busy months editions containing over 3,500 advertisements. Don't look very much like "getting hurt" by this alleged free advertising, does it?

Poultry monthlies that simply state that they will not publish any awards are no doubt doing what they think is right, and no one can blame them. But we fail to see where the publishing and puffing up the advertisers winnings only is going to do any good. It has done a great deal of harm in a number of instances. Careful buyers want to know in what competition these winnings were made and what they really were. When we read in a leading monthly paper that Mr. ———— won five prizes on ———— at New York, it looks big. Investigation proves that he did not even win a second prize, but had to be content with thirds, fourths and fifths. Is this square business?

Teaching by book was the method of the days of our forefathers; teaching by observation is the method of to-day. To judge by the learned essays on various subjects of more than passing importance in poultry culture, printed in the very largely circulated magazines of to-day, the practical observer is forced to arrive at the conclusion that the authors are living in the wrong age. While they are alive in the flesh, their ideas and theories have been a long time dead. Knowledge gained by practical experience is retained forever; pumped-into-the-noodle knowledge like the pump, gives out sooner or later. The more vigorous the pumping, the quicker the filling and emptying of the bucket.

WORLD'S FAIR SHOW STAFF.

The Forum of the Universal Exposition will be in charge of well known men of the highest character and with extended and successful experience in the exhibition of live stock. The time of making awards is recognized by the management as the crucial and culminating hour in the history of the live stock show of the Universal Exposition.

Col. Charles F. Mills, the Chief of the Department of Live Stock of the World's Fair, has had extended and successful experience in the conduct of the largest shows of live stock ever held and fully appreciates the great anxiety of the exhibitor when he places his stock at the bar of the highest tribunal for the trial of the comparative merits of the animals exhibited.

The Chief has provided every known safeguard against interference with or hindrance or distraction of the judge in his examinations, deliberations and conclusions by placing the forum and judges under the immediate protection of the best known show ring experts. The assistants of Mr. Mills have been called from New York, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, Kansas, Michigan, Missouri, Indiana, Iowa, Maryland and Illinois.

The following gentlemen selected by Col. Mills as the show yard staff of the Live Stock Show of the World's Fair are well and widely known in live stock circles througout the United States and need no introduction to live stock exhibitors, viz.:

Secretary, Fred H. Rankin, Illinois.

General Superintendent, J. B. Dinsmore, Nebraska.

Superintendent of Horses, O. P. Updegraff, Kansas.

Superintendent of Cattle, C. R. Thomas, Missouri.

Superintendent of Sheep, John L. Thompson, Indiana.

Superintendent of Swine, Geo. S. Prine, Iowa.

Superintendent of Poultry, T. E. Orr, Pennsylvania.

Superintendent of Pigeons, H. Niemann, Maryland.

Superintendent of Dogs, A. P. Vredenburgh, New York.

Marshal, H. H. Hinds, Michigan.

Assistant Marshal, A. P. Madden, Indiana.

Mr. Rankin is a successful farmer and breeder of improved livestock and has made an enviable reputation as the secretary of the Live Stock Breeders' Association of Illinois.

Mr. Dinsmore is now and for years past has been the efficient and popular president of the Nebraska State Fair. He was the Chief of the Live Stock Show of the Trans-Mississippi Exposition at Omaha, and General Superintendent of the Live Stock show of the Columbian Exposition. Mr. Updegraff was for years secretary of the Kansas State Fair and has had charge of or been prominently identified with the conduct of the horse shows at Kansas City, St. Louis, Denver and other points.

SEASONABLE POULTRY TOPICS.

By Michael K. Boyer.

The moulting season begins in July with the younger breeding stock, the period being delayed according to the age of the bird. Those fowls which begin shedding their feathers in July can be relied upon for fall laying, while those which do not show signs of shedding feathers before August or September will hardly resume business of egg production before January or February. Hens past two years of age seldom give any eggs before March or April. For this season on almost all poultry farms all hens are disposed of after their second laying season.

A molten fowl is not a sick one, and at the same time it is not in what might be termed a prime condition. The shedding of the coat is not a strain upon them, but the growing of new feathers calls for all the stamina that is in the fowl. It requires all the food the fowl gets to keep up the strength and feed the body for the growth of these new feathers. This leaves very little if any material for the manufacture of eggs. If there is any physical weakness in a fowl it will show itself during the moulting period.

During this period the male birds should be removed from the flocks. Some breeders, after removing the males, run the females in largs flocks and give them free range over a good pasture. It is an excellent idea, but as the majority of poultry breeders do not have the spare land, they must make up for it by supplying green food liberally. Green food, or some good substitute, should be pare of the bill of fare the year round, but it is even more important during molting than at any other season.

During July and August it is important that the growing stock receive the best of care. They should have as large a run as possible, and it should be partly shaded. On our poultry farm we give each flock of chicks a run measuring 7x110 feet. This is mostly in grass, with shady nooks for them to run under during the heat of the day. When the chicks are small we run about twenty-five in a flock, and as they mature we cut down the number. Generally we keep the pullets and cockerels in seperate runs as soon as they are half-grown, and cut the number down to about a dozen in a run. In this way we do not need to further disturb them until they are ready for the breeding pens.

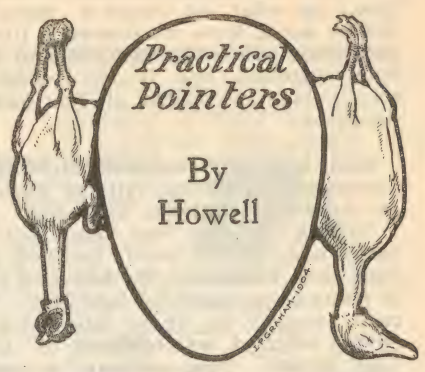
Broody hens at this time of the year are more or less a nuisance and should be removed from the laying house as soon as it is noticed that they persist in occupying the nests. Coop them in a separate enclosure not provided with nests, and they will soon get over their trouble. Never subject them to such torturous methods as ducking them in water, yarding with a wild young cockerel, or throwing them over the fence into a strange yard to be half killed by a lot of jealous hens. Broodiness is nature's vacation for the hen, and such methods are anything but restful to them, besides very often injurious.

August is a good time to select from the flocks of early hatched chicks such as are most desirable to be retained for breeding purposes, and the rest should go to market. This will cut down the feed bill and at the same time give room for those you wish to raise to maturity.

Be careful what you feed to the stock. Bran, ground oats, middlings, with a little cornmeal, and meat scraps, should be their mash; and whole wheat the grain food. They must also have a liberal supply of green food. Care must be taken in the selection of meat scraps. A poor article will produce small worms in the intestines. This annually kills off hundreds of chicks and the cause is seldom known.

If you can spare the time, now is a good time to re-whitewash the interior of all the hen houses. It not only improves the looks, but it disinfects, and makes them more healthful. It is also a good time to make repairs to the buildings, especially the roofs. Neglect in this is apt to bring chicken pox in your flocks in Fall.—Farm, Garden and Poultry.

BEAVER HILL FARM.



I feel somewhat timid in giving you a few glances that I had the pleasure of having of a very fine poultry plant. The plant in question is owned by Mr. T. E. Orr, secretary-treasurer A. P. A., also superintendent World's Fair. There is nothing that I can say that will make him more famous, so I will leave the man out of the question, but must say Mrs. Orr is a most hospitable woman. Arriving in Beaver long after eating hours, I did not have to wait long before I had a plenty of good things and I felt at home at once. Still, why shouldn't I in the home of the Orrs. Still, I won't get funny. Mr. Orr is a very busy man—World's Fair, A. P. A., Beaver Hill Farm, Orr & Cooper, and many other things keep him more than busy. Still, I promised to leave the man alone.

Saturday afternoon being fine, we started out to visit the farm. By the way, Mr. Orr was expecting the mayor of Pittsburg that afternoon, but a telegram was received that his highness could not come. Arriving at the farm, the first thing I saw was a whole bunch of White Wyandottes. They were all turned out to grass. I enjoyed the sight very much, as I admire this variety above all others. It seems rather foolish for me to try to describe the birds. Mr. Orr's stock is so well known that, like himself, has become famous. One cannot hold up at Pan-American, Indianapolis and Hagerstown without good stock, and Mr. Orr's birds held their own in the places mentioned. The Black Wyandottes did not take my eye—do not like them—but Mr. Orr said they were the best layers on the place. The houses are roomy and everything a chicken could ask for, but I imagine it would be difficult for the operator, as there is no alley way and everything has to be taken through each pen. The large house for Silvers is built rather peculiar and I am very glad I saw it. It is built on a slope and is all right

Mr. Orr had a great number of Silvers and he pointed out this winner and that winner. Silvers I am not fond of, so I passed on to the next, which happened to be the Partridge. Well, I was completely infatuated. It was with the greatest will power that I did not bring some back with me. These birds were running around the barn. They had such a rich color, they were elegant shape, good size and in condition every way. Had I any encouragement from "Tom" I would have had some. They must become popular. Good layers and very beautiful.

I was also very much impressed with the Orpingtons. A grand lot of birds. Every one looked in the pink of condition. They were all Buffs, and fine. Still, I prefer the Wyandottes. Some very fine Buff Wyandottes were next shown. One cock bird was fine in shape, and color excellent, that clear buff all over that pleases the owner as well as a judge. Golden Wyandottes were the next on the list. The birds looked fine, large, nice birds, but I understand they are not good sellers. Silver Penciled and Columbian Wyandottes were next on the list; a regular Wyandotte farm. If any one can truly say, "Home of the Wyandottes," Mr. Orr certainly can. It is a great pleasure to have the chance to make such a visit and I got some points that will stand me in hand. Mr. Orr has another farm just north of Beaver, in Ohio, where lots of Wyandottes are grown. After going the rounds, Mr. Orr started in to get up a field of hay. I had a pressing invitation to join him. I had to refuse, and joining with Mrs. Orr we had a pleasant chat while Tom was "sweating" barrels to get the hay up before another rain. Quoting Dr. Abbott I am only giving the "Impressions of a Careless Traveler" and have not gone into detail. Everybody knows Tom Orr and Tom Orr's chickens, and all I can say in conclusion is that he has a very good plant, indeed, and a good lot of chickens. Could write three times as much by going more into detail, but "what's the use." I enjoyed the plant and the fowls. There were some fine Collies there, but my time was too limited to do anything outside of chickens.

It's a pleasure to visit the Orrs of Beaver, and a pleasure to visit Beaver Hill Farm, the home of all the Wyandottes. D. LINCOLN ORR.

Eggs.—Receipts for week, 65,700 cases. Market has been a rather unsatisfactory condition. All who were able, left the city for the mountains and seashore, thereby slightly depressing the demand for the best. Were it not for this fact an advance in the price of nearby marks could be expected. We quote: Fancy selected white, 24c; mixed colors, same quality, 22c to 23c; fair to good, 21 to 22c; western best, 19 to 20½c; lower grades, 15½ to 19c; southern, 14 to 17½c per dozen.

Poultry—Receipts, 27 cars live and 9,000 packages dressed. With a more moderate supply prices have advanced a little, spring chickens being more freely offered. Buyers have inclined to pick for the fancy lots, especially for the large western scalded for certain classes of trade. We quote: Live fowls, 14c; chickens, nearby and western, 16c; southern, 14c; old cocks, 9c; turkeys, 12c per lb.; western ducks, 80c, southern 60c per pair; pigeons, 20c per pair; fresh killed fowls, 13½c; Phila broilers, 22 to 23c; Pennsylvania and other nearby best, 18 to 19c; other sizes, 15 to 17c per lb; spring ducks, 15 to 15½c; turkeys, 14 to 15c per lb.; white Squabs $2.50, dark $1.50, mixed $2.25 per dozen.

A little extra attention to the growing stock at this time may mean a lot of added profit later. Some broods may be trying to grow a crop of lice and feathers at one and the same time. This cannot be accomplished successfully, and if the breeder is wise one crop will be gathered at short notice, and it will not be the feathers.

When it comes to dealing with vermin, it is best to be over-punctual rather than to contract the some-other-time habit. Once a chick begins to droop it can no longer be regarded as a possible dividend paying proposition, and the cause in nine cases out of ten can be traced directly to mites and lice.

Another thing to which a poultryman dare not turn a deaf ear is housing his stock. The cockerels must be yarded by themselves; this accomplished, suitable quarters must be arranged for the pullets, all possible freedom that can be given them should be theirs; they are the future workers of the flock and every art known to the breeder should be practiced that they may grow up strong and vigorous and with constitutions capable of standing up under the strain put upon them.

The fellow who has acres at his disposal need care little about this part of the business. Colonization and unlimited range co-operate with Dame Nature in a way it is hard to imitate, but if blessed in one way, there are still drawbacks. While enjoying an early morning stroll as an appetizer, or in search of a substitute for protein, albumen or some of these new fangled food, a hawk is liable to pounce on a promising pullet and break up what the owner a moment before would have considered a likely exhibition pen. The shotgun and the ever watchful eye is the remedy—and include in the list all four-footed prowlers.

Here is a very sensible article by a correspondent in the Tribune Farmer on the above subjects, who says:

"Owing to the very late spring many more chicks were hatched in June than usual, and the hatching was in many cases extended into July. To care properly for these late hatched chicks requires watchfulness to prevent disease from getting a start among them. The use of incubator and brooder insures freedom from lice, but many of us still rely upon the hen, and consequently must fight the lice and a number of other evils. A brooder is preferable to hens in every way. If we depend upon the hen there will be chicks trampled to death, chilled to death and possible some lost or devoured by a neighbor's cat. With a brooder and an inclosed run there are none of these with which to contend, and the percentage of chicks brought successfully to maturity will be correspondingly high. If hens must be used, the nests and all surrounds should be kept clean and every precaution should be used to keep them free from lice.

At this time my yard is full of young stock of every age from three to twelve weeks, and in the brooder yard are others just hatched. All of these last are intended for market and will be brought to the proper size as quickly as possible. They are fed corn bread and finely chopped meat scraps until a week old, then the smaller grains are added, and after the fourth week their principal food is corn, beef scraps and some green stuff. Free range is not advisable for market fowls. They should have no more exercise than is necessary to insure good health. From the first, grit is absolutely necessary to insure perfect digestion, and failure to provide it will surely cause trouble. I believe that broken china gives more satisfactory results than the grit sold by poultry dealers, and the hens eat it more rapidly. In my yard I placed two boxes of grit, one china, the other commercial, and the china was taken eagerly by the fowls, while the other was not eaten at all until there was no china left.

All young stock not intended for layers or breeders should be disposed of as soon as they reach the proper size. To keep them longer is a useless expense. It is better to sell at once at the prevailing market price, though it may be low, than to wait for higher prices.

A disease which kills many young chickens during the summer months is bowel trouble. The principal cause is the feeding of wet food: Often more food is given the fowls than they will eat at once, and in hot weather it soon becomes sour, is eaten later and causes sickness. If not allowed to go too far before treating, bowel trouble can be cured by giving a few doses of ginger to the affected fowl. The best preventive is to feed nothing but dry food.

Lice probably cause more trouble than any of the various diseases; yet the farmers refuse in many cases to heed the advice so often given in regard to cleanliness. Lice thrive in filth, and if the house and premises are kept clean the pests will not remain. A liberal use of whitewash and lime will work wonders, but even these will prove ineffective if the droppings are allowed to accumulate for weeks. Clean the poultry house twice a week in summer, and give plenty of sunshine and fresh air.

Give free range to the young pullets if possible. They will mature in less time than if confined, and before cold weather sets in they should be laying.

An inexperienced but ardent fancier, residing in the State of North Carolina, sends me a feather from the tail of a winner at the last Madison Square Garden Show. He says: "As you will see, one side of it has been torn or worn off; every feather in his tail is the same way. Now, what I want is to know what is the cause and the remedy therefor. Would you advise me to pluck every feather from his tail and let them grow out again, or will he shed them in time to show at the fall exhibitions?"

I answered, the bird was either roosting in a place where he rubbed his tail against a rough board, or a wire partition, or else some hen was stripping the web from the shaft of the feather from pure devilishness. Since I have examined the feather a second time I am more than convinced the latter is the correct solution, from the fact that the injury is done at the extreme end of the feather where no resistance would be met. Some mischievous hen, for want of other business, is amusing herself by cutting the web from the feather, like an "alligator snapping his jaws at a nigger's leg."

PENDULOUS CROP.

Irregular feeding or over-feeding with hard dry corn is very liable to cause crop trouble. Over-distension by giving too large a feed of grain after a long fast, or mechanical obstruction on account of some indigestible substance blocking the passage from the crop to the gizzard, are common causes. Where no regard is paid to the hours of feeding, and large quantities of grain, such as Indian corn, poor oats, and barley, are thrown down, some fowls will be sure to gorge themselves greedily with it. As soon as the grain is put within reach they rush eagerly at it, and eat all they can, a mouthful at a time. This is unnatural; a fowl should pick a grain and not a mouthful at a time. The bird, stimulated by the presence of the others, swallows as much as possible, overfills its crop, and then has what in the human being would be called "a pain in the chest." By instinct the bird has recourse to water to remove it, but food can only pass to the gizzard as that organ empties itself of the stuff previously in it. In the meantime it swells, and causes distension of the crop. From the frequent occurrence of this there is a loss of digestive powers; the gizzard has become large, weak, and flaccid, unable to dispose of the food daily put in it. Appetite ceases and thirst increases, the fowl drinks to the last, and dies. If the part is merely swollen, a good remedy is to pour a tablespoonful of neat gin or brandy down the bird's throat, and to starve it for a day—i. e., from one breakfast time until the next—and then feed it sparingly with soft food three times a day, mixing some finely-chopped raw onion in it. If this plan fails to effect a cure, operation is necessary. To perform this, proceed as follows: Take a sharp knife or lance, and having picked the feathers from the front of the breast in a straight line downwards, cut it open. The opening should be made over the most dependent part of the crop, and from 1½ in. to 2 in. in length. Next make a small incision in the crop, clear out its contents, and well wash it. Then, if necessary (that is, if the crop has become so loose that it appears to have broken through the outer skin), with a pair of sharp scissors cut a piece out of the crop (including the incised part) from ¾ in. to 2 in. wide in the centre. A piece 2 in. wide will in most instances be sufficiently large, but such is only necessary when a fowl has a very much distended crop. When the crop is open it is best to pass a finger (greased) into the passage to feel the outlet, in case of their being some obstruction, also to put into the crop a small piece of lard, about the size of a hazel nut, before sewing it up. Close the opening in the crop by sewing it, and then the outer skin; be sure to sew them separately. Let each stitch be independent of the other by knotting the ends, and be careful that the lips of the wound are drawn together evenly. About four stitches in the crop, and

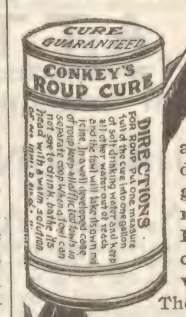
After the operation keep the bird in a small place for a few days, and feed her on a well-prepared soft food, allowing a few hours' rest before food is given. A pinch or two of table salt occasionally mixed with the meal is very beneficial, as it helps to aid assimilation and prevents sour crop.—Poultry, England.

DORKING RECOLLECTIONS.

I pass to silver-greys—long my own special favorites—which I have already alluded to as the offspring of the old English grey Dorking, bred lighter and lighter by the lovers of the silvery shades. I find no mention of them in Dixon's "Ornamental and Domestic Poultry," published in 1850, and but a few meagre lines in "The Poultry Book," which appeared about 1853. I think the sub-variety was first alluded to as "Lord Hill's breed" in a little monograph by Mr. John Baily, "The Dorking Fowl." The then Lord Hill was a great agriculturist, and an early exhibitor of cattle and poultry, but the strain died out at Hawkstone, for fifteen or twenty years later, when visiting the many races of birds and quadrupeds in the park, most interesting to a fancier and naturalist, I could find no trace whatever of the breed. In 1865 a grand cock which I bought, and which had won second at the Birmingham show of 1864, was described to me as a "silvery" one, though his hackle would not now pass muster in a class for silver-greys, and I believe it was about the year 1867 that they first had separate classes at Birmingham. In 1868 I matched up a silver breeding pen, though even then the hackles of the cocks and the wings of the hens were very faulty. The earlier exhibition silvers were far less massive than the darks. This may in part have been due to the absence of the Oriental and other crosses in the strain; in part also, I fancy, to crosses with silver duckwing Game, to improve the hackle color. Evidence of this long lingered in the pale pink eggs often laid by the hens, and still more in the dusky, almost horn-colored legs, too much tolerated in both sexes. It is quite thirty years since I lent "Theodora," a really fine hen, the equal of which I doubt if I have possessed since, for portraiture in Mr. Wright's grand "Book of Poultry"; and since I wrote for the same work notes on the breed as it was then, your readers may like to know how far it seems to me to have progressed since then. To take the utilitarian point of view first, I think the hens are layers of more and larger eggs than they were, and that both sexes (and this also holds good with the darks) are less subject to gouty toes than were their ancestors. From a fancy point of view their feet are whiter, and the hens are less apt to be rusty in the wing. Of course, about the most distinguishing character of the breed is the silvery hackle and black breast of the cock. These points have both been greatly improved and intensified. The hackle difficulty has been and is a great and real one, for the slightest taint of "colored blood" (and "colored blood" often has been used to improve other points, such as size of comb and shortness of leg) will ruin the hackles of a family for generations. The danger, too, is a most insidious one, as I know to my cost, for some cockerels of even a first cross in their first year's fall plumage will pass easily for silvers. To such a bird, a peculiarly magnificent Dorking in form and head points, I once myself gave first prize at Birmingham. A friend claimed him for ten guineas and presented him to me, little knowing the trouble he was destined to bring upon my yard. By March the silver hackle has turned straw color, and at the next moult his wing bows turned coppery. It is needless to say that all his fine descendants (fine in form they were) had to be killed or sold as farmyard stock. It is possible to breed cocks with hackles of so pure and intense a silver that the sun has no more effect upon them than upon the feathers of a white Fantail pigeon; such birds are rare, and when recognized always command high prices, for the property is hereditary, if only hens descended from a similarly good cock be used. For this beauty I had a v. h. c. cockerel at the Crystal Palace, with by no means a pure black breast, claimed by a knowing fancier for fifteen guineas. This brings me to other prominent characteristic—a glossy green black breast, so seldom combined with a pure white hackle, and so extremely beautiful when so combined. There is no denying the fact that in most strains three cockerels out of four with perfectly silver hackles shows some trace of white, either in breast, tail, or thighs, and the pullets from them are either too light in breast, show white in their secondary wing feathers, or spote on the wings and back. Hence some breeders have resorted to the tiresome method, in vogue with Hamburg fanciers, of breeding cockerels and pullets from different pens. I have never myself adopted it, and believe that by careful selection of breeding birds for several generations both sexes should be produced in approximate perfection from the same stock. I know no breed of fowls in which success depends more upon scientific knowledge of the pedigree of each family, or in which observation of the corresponding points in the two sexes, that almost instinctive faculty of the true fancier, brings a more certain reward.

White Dorkings are always attractive to the casual visitor to the poultry yard. What can be more beautiful than the purity of their white plumage and their coral-like full rose-combs? Controversy has gathered round their origin, too; in all probability they are a most ancient race, which Columella knew and compared unfavorably with the then colored race. Later fanciers and later authors have taken the same line. I have often wondered whether before drawing their comparison they had kept both the colored and the white breeds contemporaneously for a third of a century; I have, and unhesitatingly assert that I have found the white the hardier race. It was in the year 1868 that I started a strain of whites. I began with eggs from the yards of an honorable Sussex fancier, Mr. Brent. The produce were pretty and very white, but I am convinced that they had the blood of white Game, for the hens laid pink eggs. The best of their produce were selected, and from time to time I introduced the finest cocks I could procure. Most of their then breeders are now no more among us. From one lady, a true and honored fancier—Mrs. Hayne—I procured a beautiful pair of hens some thirty-two years ago, which, mated with my then best cock, laid the foundation of a not inglorious family. As with the silvers, I have seen many changes in the race of white Dorkings, also all for the better. They are certainly marvelous layers, taking into consideration the fact that they are also sitters; their bones are small for their size, and on the table they resemble the old-fashioned small-boned grey Dorking, and under fairly good circumstances they hardly ever ail. Some years ago a gentlemen in the West of Scotland, then a stranger to me, wrote to consult me as to the best breed of fowls for general use in a not too good climate. He had large premises, so, much to his surprise, I recommended white Dorkings. He took them in faith, though he had heard the usual tale of their delicacy. Years afterwards I made his personal acquaintance, and he told me that he owed me much for my advice, and for the white Dorkings I had sent him, for he had never before been so well supplied with eggs and chickens. So much for the points of utility of the breed; but how about their points of beauty now as compared with thirty-five years ago? Here again I find the change all on the right side. From the same pen came chickens with both single and double combs; indeed, some fanciers contended that the single was the older and the better type of comb. Fanciers have long since settled the question in favor of rosecombs, and these are now bred almost to a certainty; the five toes, too, come with much more certainty and uniformity, and in the best strains the plumage of both sexes, especially of the cocks, is of a purity of whiteness seldom seen when first I bred them. I believe there had been a better day when the breed was kept and shown in greater purity, but just when I started white Dorkings the craze for size prevailed, which I have already alluded to as for a time the bane of the colored races. Whites had been crossed with coarser and with larger breeds, with light Brahmas, white Cochins, and huge rose-combed dark Dorkings. A celebrated white (?) cock of Lady Holmesdale's, with long carried all before him, and at her sale was knocked down at a high figure to some not-discriminating purchaser, was known to be the product of the latter union. Some few chickens from such crosses come white, and have all desired points, though, as I have described in the case whiteness is a very transient and illusory beauty. It departs with the first spell of sunshine, and the yellow tint of impurity lingers in the progeny for many a generation. To breed out these taints, so prevalent in apparently white Dorkings, and so difficult to detect, has been for thirty years the chief aim of the most careful white Dorking fanciers. They have largely succeeded in it, and I know by certain experience that, as with silver-greys, so with white Dorkings, it is possible to breed birds which are in no way whatever affected by the tanning rays of summer sun. The task is almost a more difficult one in the case of whites than of silver-greys, for much depends upon the hen's ancestry, and it is next to impossible to detect by the eye any signs of impurity in many a white hen, whose produce in perhaps the second generation will prove her to have mongrel ancestors.



Blue or cuckoo Dorkings have never been among my favorites. Once I tried, and soon discarded them, disgusted with the motley and dusky crew of chickens which they produced. "Cuckoo" is a composite marking, which may easily be produced by crossing black with white fowls. A certain number of the chickens are almost certain to be thus marked, but as certainly their progeny will again revert to the original colors, and break out, too, into all kinds of strange mottlings. A group of well-marked cuckoos is a pretty sight, and cuckoo breeds are usually hardy, doubtless on account of their being the offspring of a cross. In England the cuckoo Dorking, in Scotland the old Scotch Grey, once had this reputation, but probably the amount of inbreeding necessary to establish the peculiar marking with any approach to certainty would neutralize the original vigor of the cross-bred family. Certain it is that though I can recollect several efforts to encourage cuckoo Dorkings, they have never succeeded for any length of time.

I have already exceeded my alloted space, but there remain one or two points which I cannot pass. Your readers will have gathered from this article that I regard it of the greatest importance to keep all the varieties of Dorkings pure, if any regard is paid to their beauty. The former three are sufficiently widely distributed to enable fanciers to obtain with ease, enough fresh blood to keep up the vigor of their strains. Above all should Asiatic crosses be avoided; there are signs of these obvious to the practiced eye and ear. Tiny feathers on the legs, cocks' single combs inclining backwards with the curve of the head, full downy thighs, and backs rising into "cushions" towards the tail, and, about all, the long drawn Cochin-like crow. Of all these beware. On the other hand, there is one small feature of the old Dorking faces which it pleases some new fanciers and judges to condemn—I mean a little white in the ear-lobes. The old pictures of Dorkings show it; I remember that Mr. Teebay always considered it a sign of good Dorking pedigree, and I know that Mr. Harrison Weir does the same. I believe that the purely red ear came in with the aforementioned Asiatic cross in the dark Dorking, and, long afterwards, when I first exhibited silver-greys, a little white in the ear was still thought necessary. Hence, it is often provoking to read the glib remarks of some reporter, who has perhaps never owned a Dorking, "A fine bird, spoilt by white in ear-lobe."

In conclusion, I am firmly convinced that as they have a past history, so the Dorking races must have a future. One by one the newly-produced and newly imported races are used up, and the really fittest must survive.—O. E Cresswell in the Feathered World, England.

SHAPE AND SIZE OF LEGHORNS.

The Brown Leghorn male as bred today to a high degree of perfection, is one of the most gorgeous and brilliant colored, most stately and stylish appearing birds of chickendom.

The nearer to perfection they are bred, the more beautiful are they to look upon. From what I have observed of the breed at some of our leading shows, I conclude that shape is lacking more than color. The Leghorn of angles, will soon be (in the show room) a thing of the past. Curves are in demand. A nice full rounded breast, a well arched neck, a concave back and a low tail sufficiently low to produce more of a curve than an angle at the root. Strange as it may seem, the Leghorn is inclined to have short legs. I know of no reason for this, except that it is desired that they be long. In the Wyandotte, it is vice versa. (The American people are ever striving for that which is the most difficult to attain).

Yes, long legs are wanted on Leghorns. Not so much in shape as in thigh. A good length of thigh, gives the bird that "well up," neat, clean cut appearance which truly adds to their beauty. Then I have noticed that an increase in length of body is meeting with approval. This is necessary in proportion to length of leg, and tends to increase the size. It is right here in body shape that I can't agree with some of the best authorities. A high, scanty breast is not my kind. Such is very common in females. I prefer to see the body of equal depth at all points, from base of hackle to point of keel, and from root of tail,to bottom of fluff. And the tail of the male to correspond in with. Thus beginning at the lower mandible where the wattles commence, draw a line downward,along the lower part of body proper, and around up to the top of tail, and you should have drawn from 3-5 to 2-3 of a circle, or slightly oval. Bear in mind I am referring to a furnished male.

Beginning at about the center of the top of the neck, and drawing downward along the back and to about the center of tail, the shape should be nearly semi-circular.

Yes, the Leghorn should be a bird of curves, not angles.

There has been much said and written, about the size of the Leghorn, or rather what the size should be, and opinions in regard to the matter, vary quite as much as do the different strains of the breed. Some breeders think that there is no danger of getting them too large. I met one, who thought that 7 lbs. was about right for a cock. Some others are satisfied if they can make them weigh 5 lbs. My opinion is, (even as before) that the most natural, useful and therefore the most desirable weight for which nobody has or ever will realize, viz: Brahma quantities and Leghorn qualities in the one breed. In consideration of the fact, that the allotted time for man is but three score and ten years, and many fall far short of that, it is hardly worth while to try to make race horses out of deer, because the latter are more swift of foot.

Let the good work go on, but don't waste precious time, in battling too hard with "old nature."

S. L. TUTTLE.

CHICKEN CROQUETTES.

By the Cook.

It is said that the way of the transgressor is hard, and I am very much inclined to believe this old axiom was originated by some poultry breeder during the season for hatching young chicks. After having decidedly bad luck with six settings of eggs and living in hopes that my next hatch would be better, you can imagine my disappointment on going to the hen house the other morning to find the hen had left her nest just as the young chickens were about coming out. The eggs were all cold and every chicken that was out was dead. This is certainly enough to cause a person to go out of the poultry business. After all, I believe the incubator to be a good thing, providing one can get a good one. But how are we to know which one is the best? You cannot read any of the advertisements but what you are almost compelled to believe they are all pretty near perfect, as they all claim the largest per cent of hatches. Then the advertising business is getting nearly as bad as the patent medicine business in some of our poultry papers. One picks up the paper, reads a rather interesting article of a column or so, and winds up by reading that So-and-So's incubators and brooders are the best and took first prize at such and such a show. I also consider the showing of incubators at shows for prizes of very little importance. How on earth is a man to tell whose incubator is the best when there is no fair test? How are we to test them satisfactorily? It is well known that an incubator will not hatch equally as well in one place as another, and I am of the opinion that the best way to judge them is to have each one in operation, under the same conditions, for the necessary three weeks, then the one giving the largest number of chicks should be awarded the prize, but when a show lasts only about four days it is next to impossible for anyone to tell which machine will do the best work.

In glancing over some papers, a writer states:

"A great deal of nonsense is written about ventilation in incubators. * * * Many suppose the air in the bubble in the egg is for the chicken to breathe, which it does not do until after the shell is broken. After the air was once breathed how long would it support life? The young of no other animal breathes, neither does the chick. My advice is to those who wish to run an incubator is, get a machine properly made and apply a little common sense in running it."

Now, the first point I wish to object to is the assertion that no specie of animal breathes until it is born. It is well known among medical men that all animals born of a mother breathe, and they do it through the placenta of the mother. He also says the air in the eggs would not support the chick. It is also well known the nearer the chick is to being hatched the larger the air space becomes, and while we have no positive proof of whether the chick breathes, what is to cause us to doubt the fact that the continual decomposition in the egg during incubation does not produce oxygen sufficient to supply the chick? This is a subject I should like to have treated by some scientific breeder who has made a few experiments. He also says the hen turns the egg because she has a fever and desires the cool side up. Will he please explain why a hen will get off her nest, run about the yard for some time, probably on a cold, rainy day, and on going back immediately proceed to turn her eggs, which I have seen them do more than once?

GEYER'S SCURVY CURE FOR POULTRY was the first article introduced to the public for this purpose, which has been thoroughly tested in the last ten years by many of our brother fanciers who are willing to say with us that there is no other article on the market like this that can be relied on to do its work properly. It is something that the poultry fancier, who appreciates his fine birds, needs very much. What looks more disgraceful than a fine flock of chickens, many, or all of them, having their legs coated with a thick, hard, scabby crust which is called scurvy? It spoils the appearance of the birds and is very annoying to them. It is also contagious. Here we have a sure cure for this ugly disease. By following the directions we guarantee that it will take off that ugly, hard coat and leave the legs clean and smooth and give them their natural color. It also has no equal for healing sores and frosted combs and wattels. It makes them very bright and red. It is just what the exhibitor wants to prepare his birds for the exhibition room. Some of our customers tell us that they have tried it with good results for weak legs. We only ask you to give it a trial. It is put up in tin boxes. Money must accompany all orders. Price, 25 cents. Address, G. A. Geyer, Florin, Pa. 560tf

By Using Geyer's Champion Disinfectant & Vermin Destroyer

There are, in all classes of powders before the public, many calculated for the sure cure of lice and vermin and a dozen other purposes, yet are they reliable, and have they produced the results claimed?

In offering this compound, we offer a powder such as is not before the public, and fills a place that none other can for the purpose intended—a positive, sure disinfectant and destroyer of all vermin that invests either poultry, small animals, those of the barn yard.

It is a perfect destroyer of all disease germs, and produces a healthy odor wherever distributed. It is a sure cure for gapes, in young chicks.

If you are skeptical and don't believe in Powders or compouud because of many worthless ones on the market, we ask, please cast aside your prejudice and give this compound a trial. It is put up in 2 pound boxes. Price 25c. 560tf

Handling and Feeding of Growing Stock.

By J. P. W. Marx.

Perhaps it will be recollected that I did not write very enthusiastically about hatching chickens in June or July. I know, indeed, that then the eggs hatch well, and that for a time the chickens are very little trouble; but about August we are often in a quandary what to do with them, and that is why I did not write encouragingly about those late hatches. The last comers most certainly should have every inducement to make them grow, yet mixing them with much older chickens is certainly not conducive to their progress, so the later hatched ones must be looked upon as handicapped at the start, unless they can have a yard or run to themselves. The little chickens which have to run along with a flock of three-months-old birds may manage pretty well so long as they keep near their mother hen, for she takes pretty good care to drive away the old birds from her flock, particularly at feeding time. But when they begin to wander about them come in for more pecks than are good for them, and have to be very active to pick up all the food they require; and surely, too, the food given to the older birds will be too coarse and strong for chickens perhaps one-fourth their age, and such food as may be suitable for them will be expensive feeding for the larger fowls.

No doubt by means of wire netting and hurdles all kinds of feeding pens can be arranged wherein the little chickens can feed in comfort, unmolested by larger ones; yet these feeding places are not altogether satisfactory, and often tend to increase the bullying which seems to be incessantly going on.

Then, as I have so often remarked, newly hatched chickens are so much more fascinating than old ones, that we are very apt to spend more time with them than they are in fact worth. I often think that one chicken hatched during the first four months of the year is worth three hatched in the next four; but I am afraid the new comers very often trespass on the attention which can be more profitably bestowed on their elder brethren.

But what can be done with the aforesaid elder brethren? The answer is simple. Keep them growing. Yet that is not so easy to do. Neither is it easy to write precise directions how to do it. For what is to be done depends in a way on the breed, the run the chickens are occupying, the growth they have so far made, and how they have been treated up to the present. Surely, however, I can make no mistake in advising that no change be made if the progress of the chickens is satisfactory; but if not, then to make a thorough change in their food, housing, and surroundings. Then again, I know I am on safe ground in advising a reduction in numbers, a weeding-out of the unlikely birds. I am pretty certain all of us have more chickens on the ground than we ought to have. I know, again, how difficult it is to thin them down. There is such a strong inclination to keep them to see how they will turn out, a hope that even if just now they are not growing they may make a start some day. Still, look the question squarely in the face. You have a run and roosting accommodation for fifty, and you have a hundred. You are anxious to make the most of the best. You have to buy all the food, and the bottom of the corn bin comes into sight unpleasantly often. Every chicken is not a good one; some can be thrown out, and this had much better be done at once. The survivors and your own pocket will benefit by the lessened number of crops to be filled. Such, at least, is the fate of the ordinary poultry-keeper. There may be, nay, there are, fortunate individuals who have ground enough for the asking, and in their happy case all that has to be done is to pay for food. However, as the great object just now is to provide every opportunity for the best chickens to improve and make fine birds, clearing off the worst must certainly help us to do this.

By now the chickens will thrive better in small isolated colonies than in one large flock. Each colony should consist of birds of the same sex, and as nearly as possible showing an equal amount of precocity. These two conditions should be pretty strictly observed, and another which can be followed with advantage is to keep the same or similar breeds or varieties together. Although chickens of the heavy and light breeds may have been reared together, yet after a certain period, and as they begin to enter on the adult stage, the two types will be better apart, and for heavy and light you can substitute quick or slow maturing breeds. Any adult male bird which it may be desired to keep over for next season can share a run with a flock of cockerels without any harm, and when absolutely necessary, a few hens may be put up with the pullets. In most cases these will agree all right, although at times some hens are spiteful and tease the chickens. This is not of much consequence if there is plenty of room for them to get out of the way, but on smaller ground it will be better to remove the most quarrelsome hens.

Some people seem anxious to know how many feeds the chickens should have per day, when they should be fed, and how much should be given to them. Those who wise to feed by rule may begin well before their own breakfast time, a second meal about mid-day, another towards five o'clock, and the last about roosting time. Yet as our object is to kep the chickens growing, I do not recommend feeding by strict rule either as to time or quantity. Healthy, fast-growing chickens may be expected to be hungry, or, at any rate, ready for something to eat about every three or four hours. Thus they may have a little food whenever they seem inclined to pick it up as if they wanted and enjoyed it; if they seem indifferent to the food and apparently without appetite, let them wait until they are more willing to oblige you. A clever feeder will never have his chickens in this state; he will regulate the time of feeding and the quantity of the food, so that after a reasonable interval his chickens are quite ready for another feed. Very little experience is required to tell whether the chickens are playing at eating or are in earnest. I am afraid mine are always terribly hungry.

As to quantity, it would seem possible to calculate that a given number of chickens should eat a certain weight of food per day ,and in some cases a given weight of food has been weighed out and divided into so many feeds a day. Such a mehanical way of feeding is of small advantage to the chickens or to the pocket. I have already remarked that the fowls should be kept well fed, but not over fed, nor yet starved, and as their appetites vary the only way to do this is to give such a quantity of food as the feeder judges is sufficient; sometimes more will re required and sometimes less. To throw down a fixed quantity at a fixed time every day means that some days the fowls will be overfed and the sparrows feast on the uneaten food, and another day perhaps will not have sufficient.

I have made it a custom about this period of the year to commend any spare green vegetables from the garden to the notice of the poultry-feeder. In those districts where rain has been scarce this summer lettuces, cabbages, and other greenstuffs will be very useful foods indeed. Fresh green food is at all times greedily eaten by fowls, while grass is fienerally accept-ed as almost a necessity for chickens. In some party of the country the grass and other natural vegetation was pretty well burnt up by the middle of the month, and absolutely useless as a nutritious food. In such cases green food from the garden is of more than ordinary service, even if it be only thrown on the ground for the fowls to pick over—the worst and most wasteful way to use it. Lettuces and cabbages go much further if they are hung up by a string or stuck on a stick within reach of the poultry; other greenery can be hung up in a net in some convenient place for the fowls to peck at. An even more effective, though more laborious, method of treating it is to chop it up or run it through a coarse chopping machine. When so prepared it can be either suspended in a net or put in troughs; in either case very little will be left in a few minutes.

It is said we may have a recurrence of the heat-wave; if so, we may find that small or medium-sized movable poultry houses are in such cases better than the fixed ones, for they can be moved, perhaps only for a time, into a shady situation, and by this means can be kept cooler at roosting-time than if they had to stand in the open all day. I have little doubt that hot, stuffy roosting-places have a tendency to bring on that roupy kind of cold which so often attacks chickens ten to fourteen weeks old, and which is so troublesome to cure. It is common knowledge that chickens which roost in three or hedges keep strong and well, while others treated the same, but roosting in houses, go wrong. And as this cold only comes with warm days and close nights, I conclude the hot houses have something to do with it. For some years I have advised that if the chickens have to roost under cover they should do so in open sheds, with the open sides covered with wire netting for the sake of security, and in my own case and in several others this has certainly been effective. In addition, the sheds or houses should be as cool and fresh as possible at eventide, which cannot be the case if they have been standing in the sun during the day.

So far with my own small flock, I have escaped all illness, but I knowingly took another risk, which I did not altogether avoid. I made up my mind that as the chickens grew I would not fasten them in their houses at night. They just went to roost where they liked, and came out when they liked. So far I have no trouble at all on the score of health, and this clean bill is some recompense for the two or three which have disappeared, and another half-dozen or so worried by dogs and cats. On a fox-ridden farm I know the chickens have to be shut in at night to keep them alive, and although the wire-fronted sheds and houses which have been in use for some time are admitted to be a great improvement on the entirely closed-in houses, yet the sneezing and running at the nose and general stoppage of growth occurred last year in a few cases. This summer, wherever it was possible, we had the houses sprinkled or syringed two or three times a week, shortly before evening feeding time, with a solution of some purified or disinfectant with carbolic acid for its base. The chickens have done quite well during the recent hot weather, and I am hopeful they will continue to do so, for I have been successful in reducing their number, by a weeding out, to a fairly healthy condition, and the first consignment to the poulterer was quite a satisfactory deal. Broody hens, as usual, have been very troublesome lately, let if the broodiness has been checked at once the hens hitherto have soon recommenced laying. But the time is at hand when the hens, instead of laying again, begin to think about moulting; therefore a selection should be made between those which are likely to be wanted another season and those for which there seems no further use. Those which are to be kept over for showing or breeding, or even laying only, should be allowed a rest of a week or two on genuine or dummy eggs. When broken from the nest they often fall into an early moult. On the other hand, those not again likely to be required had better be cleared off in some way to make room for younger stock. No hen, considered simply as an egg-producer and a profitable article, should be kept to pass through a second adult moult. A little attention at the present time to this apparently minor detail often means winter eggs, early chickens, and an improved cash account.—The Feathered World, England.

AN EXPLANATION.

Editor American Fancier:

While I hardly think any one was misled by my name appearing on the cut of Light Brahma male that was used to illustrate a typical Light Brahma—my best friends wouldn't accuse me of being an artist—I wish to say said illustration is slightly changed from the cut made by Mr. A. O. Schilling for the American Light Brahma club; and my name is used on it only as "owner" of said cut, not the artist that made it. Mr. Schilling is a rising young artist and I have no wish to rob him of the credit of his work. I couldn't make a drawing to save me. I consider Mr. Schilling one of the coming poultry artists and wish to speak a good word for him here and elsewhere. I further consider said cut (as on our catalogue) the most typical illustration of a L. B. male that is published to date.

We long ago discarded all mechanical egg turners in incubators. They are a delusion and a snare. Take the tray out of the machine, shut the door and slowly stir the eggs about with the hand. No matter whether they are turned exactly half over or not. Stirring them and allowing them to cool are the main points. A mechanical turning device tempts us to turn the eggs and put them back without giving them time to cool.—Poultry Herald.

TURKEYS.

By T. F. McGrew,

THE BRONZE TURKEY.

Origin and size.—This variety holds the post of honor. As already stated, it probably originated from a cross between the wild and the tame turkey. Its beautiful rich plumage and its size have come from its wild progenitor. To maintain these desirable qualities, crosses are continually made. In this way the mammoth size has been gained. Their standard weight ranges from 16 to 36 pounds, according to age and sex. Probably more of this variety are grown each year than of all others. They have been pushed on all sides almost to the exclusion of the others until within a year or two. If possible the Bronze turkey has been developed too much in the direction of size. While size, within reasonable limits, is to be desired and encouraged when it is confined to length of thigh and shank, it is a gain of weight with but little additional value.

Coloring.—The coloring of this variety is a ground of black blazoned or shaded with bronze. This shading is rich and glowing, and, when the sun's rays are reflected from these colors, they shine like polished steel. The female is not as rich in color as the male, but both have the same color and shadings. Much of this richness of color is lost through inbreeding, as it is improved by each cross with the wild specimens. Of all our domestic fowls none suffer from inbreeding so much as turkeys. This should be guarded against at all times, if it is hoped to gain the best results.

Selection of breeding stock.—Naturally the Bronze turkey should be the largest in size, the most vigorous in constitution, and the most profitable to grow. This would be the status of the variety at present were it not that too little attention has been given to the selection of the females for breeding stock. It should be fully understood that size and constitutional vigor come largely through the female, and, to have this influence to the fullest extent, well-proportioned, vigorous females in their second or third year should be selected as breeders. Do not select the very large specimens for this purpose; those of a medium size are usually the best. Discard the undersized females at all times, as they are of little value as producers. Length of shank and thigh, if out of proportion, should not be mistaken for size; full-rounded body and breast indicate value most clearly; size and strength of bone indicate constitutional vigor, which should be maintained through the selection of the very best at all times for producing stock. When special care is given to the selection of the breeding stock, and the grower bears in mind those profitable market characteristics—compactness of form, length of breast and body, and constitutional vigor—the most satisfactory results may come from the growing of this variety. But no matter how much care may be given these conditions, only partial success will come if inbreeding is permitted. The use of oversized males with small females is of less advantage than the use of smaller males with well-matured, medium-sized females *

NARRAGANSETT TURKEYS.

Coloring.—The turkeys of this variety are next in size to the Bronze. They are of black ground color, each feather ending with a band of steel gray, edged with black. This imparts a grayish cast to the entire surface plumage. Mixed with this is the finish of metallic black and bronze luster. They are beautiful in form and feather and breed true to shap and color. The female has a lighter shade of gray in her markings than the male. Her entire color throughout is of lighter shading.

*Often the overlarge male will so lacerate the skin and flesh of the female as to necessitate the stitching up of wounds to save the hen turkey. This danger may be largely removed by trimming or filing off the sharp toe nails of the male just prior to their mating in the spring.

Size.—The standard weights of this variety are, for males, from 20 to 30 pounds, according to age; for females, 12 to 18 pounds. Some old males of both this and the Bronze variety weigh over 40 pounds. These weights are excessive and of but little advantage in breeding; medium-sized males and females are more valuable for producing stock. None of the several varieties of turkeys is more desirable than this for all purposes, and it should be more generally cultivated throughout the country for market. Turkeys of this variety are fine in form of breast and body, not so long in the leg as the Bronze, and of a rather more contented nature. They do not average so large in size as the Bronze, but when grown they are highly valued. Some declare that the Narragansetts will reach market size and condition in less time than the Bronze turkeys, but the writer has not been able to ascertain the truth of this statement.

THE BUFF TURKEY.

This variety is not generally grown throughout the country. In many localities it is almost unknown. The standard calls for a pure buff color throughout, but this shade of coloring is seldom seen. As bred for market, these turkeys are of a reddish buff or light chestnut color mixed with white and some dark shadings. They are highly valued in some localities for their attractiveness when dressed. Their average weight is several pounds less than that of the Narragansett. They show evidence of having been crossed with other varieties, perhaps to increase size. Some who raise this variety have paid special attention to its individuality and have maintained the true type and color, adding greatly to its beauty of appearance. Some of the Rhode Island growers are paying attention to this variety of late, in order to determine its value as compared with others.

The Bourbon Red turkey.—Akin to the Buff, in color at least, is the Bourbon Red. This variety has been known by the names Bourbon Red, Bourbon Butternut, and Kentucky Red. It is claimed by some that it was originally a wild form found in southern Iowa, Missouri, and northern Arkansas. It is not yet recognized by breeders as a standard variety. In color it is dark or brownish red, with white in wings and tail, tips of feather bluish bronze, undercolor almost white, in some cases buff; in average weight almost equal to the Bronze variety. It is claimed that it excels others in richness of color of flesh and skin, also in fullness of breast. This is not true to any marked degree. It is a strong, vigorous variety, worthy of consideration with others, but does not have any unusual features of excellence.

THE SLATE TURKEY.

The Slate turkey might be called a Blue turkey. These turkeys about average in size with the Buffs and Blacks as we generally find them. They range from 10 to 25 pounds, according to age and sex. The standard weights range from 12 pounds for a pullet or young hen to 27 younds for an old tom, and in color they are slaty or ashy blue throughout, usually spotted with black. The black color ranges from small spots to larger markings, but the less of this the better for exhibition purposes. It might be surmised that the Slate turkey originated from a cross of White and Black turkeys. These, like the Buff turkeys, are not largely bred, though some value them highly; in fact, scarcely enough of them are grown to fairly determine their merit as market turkeys. It might be of advantage to all if more attention were given to the cultivation of these two neglected varieties.

THE WHITE TURKEY.

Origin.—In America the White variety is called the White Holland turkey. The reason for this is not apparent though some think it is so called because it originally came from Holland. While White turkeys may have been brought to this country by Hollanders, they are not natural to Holland. In English works they are referred to as "Austrian Whites." They have been known in England for over a hundred years, and are considered sports from other turkeys, which is more than likely the correct view. White turkeys were formerly quite delicate and rather small, but now are more generally developed. This chance is attributed to an infusion of the blood of White sports from either the Bronze or Narragansett varieties, which has improved both size and vigor, but detracted from the color of shanks and plumage. In some instances the shanks are not quite so true a pinkish white as is demanded, and the plumage is clouded; but this in no way detracts from their value for market purposes.

Size and color.—The standard of weight is less for the Whites than for other varieties. They range from 10 pounds for young hens to 26 pounds for old toms. Recently some toms have been seen that weighed 35 pounds in show condition, but this weight is quite unusual. In color of plumage they should be white throughout (except that each has a black beard on the breast), with shanks and toes pinkish white. Those that have resulted from a cross with some other variety.

Comparative value.—In some localities White turkeys are largely grown. They show a vitality equal to that of other varieties, and are no more difficult to rear. In one section visited the writer found by careful investigation that as large a percentage of Whites was grown during the very bad season of 1903 as of the other kinds. With some the Whites did the best. When the vigor is perfect and the mating birds non-related, the young of White Turkeys are quite as easy to grow as any young turkeys.

One can not select a better variety for all uses than the White Holland. They grow to the most profitable sizes, dress beautifully for the market, their light, pinkish white shanks add to their appearance, and with them, as with all white poultry, the pin feathers show less than in the darker varieties. The very largest turkeys are not the most profitable either to grow or to sell. The medium sizes—from 9 to 18 pounds dressed—are most desirable for family use.

THE BLACK TURKEY.

Description.—This variety was for a time almost forgotten and quite neglected, but of late more attention has been given it, greatly to its advantage and improvement along the lines of valuable market qualities. The Black turkey of to-day is almost as large as the Bronze and fully its equal in many ways. This is due to crosses made with Bronze turkeys, and to proper selection thereafter. This variety is much the same as the English Norfolk turkey. No turkeys are more desirable for table purposes. When dressed they present the yellow color of skin and meat and the plumpness and finish that are desirable. The Blacks round up nicely at an early age, are quite hardy, and mature in time for the early markets. They dress to the most salable sizes, and by Christmas the young stock, if properly cared for, will attain the live weight of from 14 to 20 pounds.

Characteristics.—The Black turkeys, like the White, are more contented about home than most of the others, and while this is very desirable in some localities, it has its disadvantages in others where the large expanse of country furnishes suitable feeding grounds for the turkeys to forage over. The young are quite hardy when produced by strong, healthy, non-related parents. When it is desirable to grow turkeys of the smaller sizes, and upon a rather confined area, one can not do better than to select the Black variety.

Gracious, how my heart beats to think that I may—no, no, it cannot be! But, still—hope you know, keeps the world moving.

"Hello! Hello!! Is this West Point?" "Yes, sir. I am at your service. Command and I obey! (Aside: 'Dear me, to judge at St. Louey—be still, my heart, be still and calm')" "Well, this is T. E. Orr, Secy-Treas. A. P. A. I am getting out the proceedings and if you will cough up $8 more I can put your name down as a life member."

Great drops of cold sweat oozed out on my feverish brow. The receiver dropped from my limp hand and the next moment I fell in a swoon on the floor. To judge at St. Louey—Ah, me!

SATURDAY, AUGUST 20, 1904.

We are in receipt of two books sent to us by Mr. J. H. Robinson, editor of Farm-Poultry. They are entitled, "Winter Eggs; How to Get Them," by John H. Robinson, and "A Living from Poultry," by Michael K. Boyer. Both books are published by the Farm-Poultry Publishing Co., Boston, Mass.

These books are of a series of practical poultry publications that have distinctive places in poultry literature, being written in a concise form and filled with valuable matter, the result of the wide experience of their authors. They are well worth the price asked for them, viz.: twenty-five cents each. We shall be glad to supply any of our readers with a copy of one or both, or will send one or the other to any new subscriber to The American Fancier free, who sends us one dollar for a year's subscription.

We are glad to make the above comments regarding the above books, not only as our opinion of their value, but as an amende honorable to the statements made by "West Point" several weeks ago when he referred in a disparaging manner to the authors of these books, although he did not mention their names. We were not aware at the time to whom he referred, and knowing Mr. West Point well, we did not take him as seriously as the editor of Farm-Poultry did. "West Point" bears no malice, albeit he may be a trifle caustic at times in sizing up situations. The American Fancier is not responsible for his opinions and could not change them if it tried. He has a mind of his own, is an old practical breeder, fancier, exhibitor and advertiser of thoroughbred poultry, who has made his business a success. There are some things he says we do not agree with, but a life is a poor existence that produces only calm seas, smooth sailing and absolute harmony between the beasts of the earth and the birds of the air. At the same time the writer of these notes regrets sincerely that even unintentionally and inadvertently, the good reputation or sincerity of Editors Robinson and Boyer should have been assailed or questioned. We are always willing to right a wrong and take this means of doing so.

Some of the learned discussions on hen lice by a certain writer convey the impression that, as far as lousology is concerned, he is It. The lice, however, believe it's a case of Nit.

"The American Fanciers' title is registered and copyrighted. The contents are presumably the same. We have never deemed it necessary to call attention to the above, and would not now, had not some slick manipulators of the shears, published as original, some of our squibs and articles. We do not care how much others clip, provided they give due credit; neither do we believe in a Chinese wall copyright, but simply request the usual courtesy that governs decent journalism, poultry or otherwise. That's all." We heartily endorse the statements in the latter part of the above quotation, but we could not repress a smile when reading them. In the same issue from which the excerpt given was taken, there not only appears a long article on "Minor Ailments of Poultry" from the English Journal of the Board of Agriculture; but a translation we especially made from La Petite Gironde; and in neither instanes does The American Fancier "give credit where credit is due!"—Poultry, England.

Our esteemed contemporary is correct. The failure to credit it with the two articles mentioned is due to an oversight, as both were credited to other sources by it and in clipping and pasting these reprints, the second or real credit was accidentally left off. We have taken many articles from Poultry in the past decade and believe have always given the credit where it belongs. And if any poultry paper deserves credit for publishing every week the largest and best bunch of poultry literature in the world, it is Poultry, published in London, England.

We have had several letters regarding the best method of preventing wild ducks from flying; in other words of pinioning them. The following advice from the Feathered World, England, is to the point:

"The best way to prevent your wild ducks from flying away is to pinion them. At the outer extremity of the wing will be found a limb, very short, containing a few flight feathers. This limb is removed by the insertion of a sharp-pointed knife being put between the joints, and a smart tap on the knife handle severs the limb in less time than it takes to write about it. The bird is then thrown into the water at once, and bleeding is arrested. They take very little notice after the limb is severed, but go on feeding as usual. It takes two persons to perform the operation expeditiously and humanely, one holding the duck with the wing distended, and the other to perform the operation."

Most of the contents of this issue and every other old issue of the American Fancier is copyrighted. Help yourselves, boys and girls!

We receive frequent inquiries throughout the year regarding Ferrets, their breeding and value as exterminators of rats, etc. We are pleased to call attention to the new advertisement which starts in our classified columns, of Farnsworth Brothers, New London, Ohio. The latter are the most extensive Ferret breeders in America and their catalog and guide to the breeding and working of Ferrets is most valuable. The extent of Messrs. Farnsworth's business may readily be understood when we state that one of their Ferret barns contains 160 large pens and 440 breeding pens. This catalog will be sent to readers of The American Fancier who will send names, address and stamp.

"Jones, the Java Man," Suffield, Conn., announces the fact that he is ready to judge poultry at fall and winter shows in the future. Having had thirty-five years' experience in breeding fowls and satisfactorily placed the ribbons at a number of shows in the past few years, Mr. Jones will "fill the bill" as a judge, being thoroughly qual ified.

Supt. Poultry T. E. Orr, St. Louis, requests us to state that entry blanks for each variety are furnished and each blank is good for one variety only. Exhibitors should take particular notice of this rule in making their entries. We admit it is a very poor and cumbersome way of making entries, but the "powers that be" have decreed it shall be so and that settles it.

We are indebted to Mr. T. E. Orr, secretary of the American Poultry Association, for copies of the proceedings of the latter at the adjourned meeting at Indianapolis, Ind., September, 1903, and at the 28th annual meeting, Rochester, N. Y., February, 1904.

We invite our readers' attention to Mr. George E. Howell's announcement in his columns regarding a new classified advertising department for commission dealers in poultry and eggs. This should prove of practical value to shippers as a guide where to consign their surplus stock to. Mr. Howell will take particular care to get only reliable dealers to place cards in this department.

MORE ABOUT THE A. P. A.

In a recent issue the Ohio Poultry Journal, referring to the criticism to which the American Poultry Association has been subjected, endeavored to show that the Association had accomplished all that could reasonably be expected of it. We contended that in passing judgment on the character of its services the surrounding conditions must in fairness be taken into account, and inasmuch as some of its critics had failed to do this they deserved to be classed as mere captious fault-finders. In order to make the circumstances fully apparent, both the plan of its organization and the practical operation of that plan were set forth, concluding with the declaration that "these are some of the imperfections inherent in an association organized on the basis of this one, and yet this basis is the best possible of selection in view of circumstances which are beyond control."

Now, "Farm Poultry,"which is by no means pleased with the management of the A. P. A., but is certainly one of the ablest and perhaps most candid of its critics, challenges us to state "just exactly what are the circumstances which are beyond control and why they are beyond control." In the same article the editor of Farm Poultry, resenting the imputation that his criticism of the A. P. A. organization is merely negative, says:

"We advocate a national poultry association based on the hundreds of local poultry associations already in existence,—the local associations organized into state or district associations, and representatives from these forming the national association. This is the method of organization which has been common in political, religious and social organizations for centuries, and which is generally considered to have attained its highest development here in the United States. It is the national and practicable method."

This is Farm Poultry's plan for a representative Poultry association—its remedy for the defects it seems in the American Poultry Association. It is the only alternative we have seen formulated for the present plan of organization. It is an ideal. If the conditions in the poultry world were identical with those that prevail in the political, religious and social organizations, there could be no valid objections to it. Unfortunately they are widely different. There must be a radical change before the local poultry associations will be in a position to send representatives to a state or district association, which in turn may be represented in a national body.

There are in the United States a few strong, vigorous, energetic associations, but nine-tenths of the entire number are in a comatose state for eight months of the year, and those that are struggling with a deficit—a burdensome legacy from their last exhibitions—will outnumber the more fortunate ones that have a surplus in their treasuries. In an association with a hundred or more members there will perhaps be two dozen enthusiastic spirits who carry the chief burden of the organization, and even these only become aroused to activity when their fowls begin to exhibit signs of ultimate beauty and the season for the annual show approaches, causing the dormant "hen fever" to assume virulent aspect. Vast numbers of men who breed poultry this years will have retired from the field before a twelvemonth. Poultry associations that gave good exhibitions last winter will not have the strength to do the same thing another season. It is true that other breeders will take the places of those who drop out of the ranks and that new associations will be formed to succeed those that "give up the ghost." But these changes only prove that our poultry associations lack the permanence and stability that characterize our political and religious bodies. Political convictions, once formed, usually endure for a lifetime, and our party organizations have for their backbone an army of salaried office-holders. The love of the Lord, a desire for eternal salvation, the hope of reward and the fear of punishment combine with the social features of our religious societies to create a fervent zeal that insures for these organizations financial strength and perpetual activity. Neither the politicians nor the preachers follow the example of the poultry fanciers.

These are some of the "circumstances which are beyond control," and a bare enumeration of them conveys with it the causes of their existence.

This journal is not the especial champion of the American Poultry Association, but it sympathizes with and feels like encouraging that organization in whatever efforts it puts forth to promote the welfare of poultry interests. It is convinced, too, that the A. P. A. is trying to do a commendable work and is making real progress. Furthermore, it believes that men who travel a thousand miles to attend a meeting of the A. P. A. and devote a week's time to its affairs, bearing their own expenses, are deserving of considerate treatment. If not accorded plaudits, they should at least enjoy immunity from abuse. There may be "grafters" among them, just as there are hypocrites among the church members, but to denounce them as a class would be equally as foolish as to condemn the church as a whole because some men "put on the livery of heaven in which to serve the devil."—Ohio Poultry Journal.

NOTES FROM WISCONSIN.

John Rumbold's brief history of the Light Brahma was of interest. An old gentleman here bought Asiatics direct from Mr. Burnham many years since and 20 years ago I saw descendants of this same fowl. They were pea combed Partridge Cochins and a more uniformed plumaged bunch I never beheld in any breed. When I saw them there were about sixty pullets and some thirty-five cockerels, each sex being confined in a log enclosure, not more than 3½ feet high. It was a pretty sight. These birds had been line bred and yet they were very large and, apparently, vigorous. I brought home the largest cockerel and four largest pullets, and a neighbor selected 12 pullets and a cockerel. When, in winter, my pullets began to lay I took to the house two eggs and my wife at once wanted to know where those "small red eggs came from." "From those large Cochin pullets," I replied. "Well, you had best be rid of them," said she, and I took her advice. My neighbor's pullets laid the same sized eggs—not nearly so large as a Leghorn should lay. In color, by the way, those eggs were the darkest I have ever seen—almost a terra cotta, denoting, I suspect, that this strain was at least of pure Asiatic origin.

"West Point" is all right. I enjoy his scrambled department exceedingly. But cock fighting hasn't "stopped." Don't believe it. No more stopped than draw pocker or horse racing. More of it in the United States last year that ever before known. Biggest main ever "pulled off," at Vicksburg, within the year. The sport is older than most any other and too many men engage in it to have it "stopped." It's even more popular than football, but of course not so cruel.

After reading Rumbold's notes on the "Monarch of all Breeds," the reference to the "most profitable results" coming from "undersized" hens, in the article on "American Breeds," made me smile. I not only believe the "undersized" big hen is best for eggs, but that the medium sized "small hen" is better. And I have the same right to my opinion as has the Brahma or Wyandotte breeder. Fact is, poultry papers are filled with a lot of stuff about the wonderful (?) American breeds. I never could discover any special merit in them not possessed by other kinds, or rather most other kinds. A lady here who has kept a record of her Wyandottes and feeds especially for eggs, can't quite equal the record of a neighbor who keeps Dominique Pit Games. Hers have a country range, while his are kept yarded. And so it goes, depending much, I believe, upon the strain. To produce a good laying strain you should "pick" for results, i. e. select not only the best layers to begin with, but keep selecting breeding pullets descended from the hens with best records. The trap nest was certainly a much-needed invention.

I believe the most compactly built fowl and the heaviest, for its inches, is the Aseel Game. This fowl is like the Cornish Indian, but "more so"—more solid, though smaller. Now, it is my opinion that if some of the fellows who are trying to produce table fowl would use an ingredient of this blood they might build better table bird than any on the market. I'm not pretending to know what crosses to make, but it seems to me someone might make a hit by experimenting. I would suggest Aseel, Dorking and Asiatic bloods, or Aseel, Golden Wyandotte and Asiatic Light Brahma.

A friend in the west once wrote me that he had produced a remarkably fine table fowl from a mating of large Brahma hens to an Aseel-Malay cross-bred cock. The latter was Red Pit color, yellow legs and skin and was a very solid bird of eight pounds. The chicks had Brahma size, almost, and nearly the solidity of the parent cock. The breeder talked of establishing a strain, but I never heard how he came out. His mongrels certain had white pin feathers, had shape, size, plenty of flesh and were reported "good lookers." F. H. GRAVES.

WHITE WYANDOTTES VS. BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCKS

The White Wyandotte to-day stands second in numbers of all the varieties of poultry in our land. The Barred Plymouth Rock is first. The latter still seems to be the favorite, but how long it will be is hard to tell. The Barred Plymouth Rock is a fair sample of what the American people can produce. By crossing and re-crossing several breeds, and by judicious inbreeding and intelligent mating, we have to-day a beautiful variety, with true barring, even color and uniform type. Not a few varieties have had their booms,but it looks as though the Plymouth Rock is here forever.

The rival of the Barred Plymouth Rock—the White Wyandotte—has gained in popularity very rapidly.

True, they have some advantages over the former. To begin with, they are not as large. To some this would be considered a disadvantage, but I think differently, that is, from an all-round point of view. In my estimation it is the weight not the breed that is best adapted for all-round purposes. For instance, a naturally matured, healthy hen in good laying condition, that weighs 6 lbs., whatever the breed, as long as color of skin corresponds, is best adapted for the production of eggs and meat.

Hens of such size are not apt to be too persistent in sitting, and when they are used for incubating purposes are not as likely to destroy as many eggs and chickens as the heavier and clumsier fowls. There are strains of White Wyandottes that waste very little time in sitting and are easily broken up. In fact, I have noticed several instances where the mothers would wean their chicks and be laying again sooner than they should for the good of the chicks.

As a market fowl they stand at the top. Their bodies are plump, skin yellow and plumage white, which is really all that can be desired.

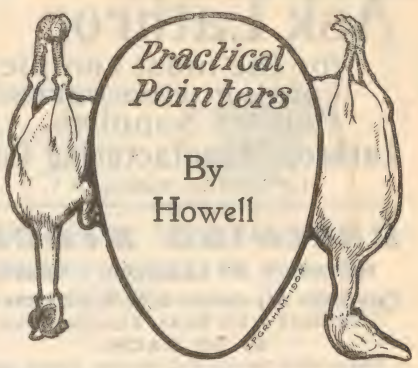
I think that as a class they are longer lived than the Plymouth Rock. A great many females of the latter variety die in their second year, probably mostly from ovary troubles. Such seems to be characteristic of the breed. The White Wyandotte finds much favor with the fancier as well as with the market poultrymen. At the shows there is no individual winner that attracts much more attention than does the first prize White Wyandotte cockerel. It is a fact that a high-bred, well-conditioned specimen of this breed is meat for any eye.

It is generally considered that white fowls are easy to breed, that is, that they will breed more true. It is not difficult to breed ordinary specimens of any breed, but the very best are hard to get, and the same is very true with everything else. Absolutely pure white plumage and bright yellow legs and skin are two of the standard requisites that are rarely seen in the same bird. Here is where the fancier and the market poultryman don't quite hitch. However, I have noticed some noted winners that were considerably creamy in plumage, but their legs were bright yellow and in shape and comb fine, so they passed.

Yes, it is very hard (in fact, impossible) to get the perfect living specimen, but the fancier's business is to try, try, try to produce one just a little better than his competitor, and when he accomplishes such a feat is it surprising that he is pleased?

WHITE PLYMOUTH ROCKS AT ST. LOUIS.

The final prize list of the department of live stock of the universal exposition is a publication in which all poultrymen are interested. On page 306 will be found the schedule of Special Prizes for White Plymouth Rocks. The announcement reads as follows:



"The American White Plymouth Rock Club offers to members the following special prizes to be awarded at the Universal Exposition of 1904 at St. Louis, Mo. As determined by the best records made in the awards in the regular classes for White Plymouth Rocks by the official judge, provided that exhibitors must have entered not less than a total of fifteen fowls in the classes for White Plymouth Rocks to compete for the display specials, viz.:

	1st.	2nd.	3rd.	4th.	5th.
Cock ....$	5	$4	$3	$2	$1
Cockerel	5	4	3	2	1
Hen	5	4	3	2	1
Pullet	5	4	3	2	1
Pen	10	5	3	2	1

Silk ribbons, especially designed for the World's Fair awards, will be given with each cash special prize. The prizes for displays will be awarded to the exhibitors making the two highest scores in all the class competitions. First prize to count 10, second 8, third 6, fourth 5, fifth 4, sixth 3, seventh 2, breeding pen prizes to count twice as many points as single birds. Mr. Howell, associate editor of The American Fancier, will furnish weekly reports on the egg and poultry market, and answer all questions submitted to him relating to commercial and practical poultry keeping. When replies are requested to be sent by letter, stamps must be enclosed and letters addressed to George E. Howell, 70 Christopher St., New York City.

Eggs.—Receipts for week, 59,000 cases. Really fancy eggs are coming in in constantly decreased quantities and prices are going up accordingly; but there is no scarcity of ordinary grades of eggs—those we have with us always. The market at this season in 1903 was 24c per dozen, same in 1902 and 18c in 1901, showing the last three seasons to have been the banner egg years of the 20th century. We quote N. L. state and nearby fancy selected white 26c, mixed colors, same quality, 24 to 25c, fair to good 23½; Western, best 21c, fair to goo 19 to 20c; Southern, 14 to 18c as to quality; cracked eggs, 9 to 12c per dozen. I have quoted cracks so country shippers may know the value placed on an egg down here once the shell is fractured, and also as a warning to use good crates and pack with the utmost care.

Poultry.—Receipts, 46 cars live, and 4,700 packages dressed. Good prices are being realized. We quote live fowls, 14c; nearby spring chickens, 14c; Southern and Western, 13; turkeys, 12c per lb; live pigeons, 20c per pair. Dressed fowls, 13½c; Phila broilers, 21 to 22c, 4 lb. to the pair; small, 17 to 19c; other sections, fancy large, 18 to 19c, small, 15 to 17c; turkeys, 14 to 15c; spring ducks, 15 to 15½c, fair 13 to 14c per lb; squabs, white $2.50, dark $1.50, mixed $2.00 per dozen.

Judging by the wails of agony one sees in connection with who are to be the judges at St. Louis, some minds will be deranged unless the suspense is soon ended. Those who desire to be among the adjudicators are shrieking louder than the intended exhibitor whose holler, goodness knows, has reached a volume above a whisper. To a man on the outside the existing arrangement ouhgt to be a soul-satisfying program; no judge to influence, no need to suspect the motives of a competitor, nothing to do but select and fit the best one has and trust in Providence for results.

If the judges must be watched so carefully, and if the exhibitors and show officers have lost all confidence in their integrity, a few suggestions would seem to be in order. First, all judges who will not stand without hitching could be fitted with blinkers, a la Brighton Beach and Saratoga race tracks. Second, those who have acquired the magnetic handshake could be kept in armored cars while at the show and each class pushed in for them to pick the winners.

To be plain, don't show where you are not satisfied with the judge—stay away; but if you do show, take your medicine.

They do say the plumage of the fowls on exhibition at the Model Poultry Farm is being neglected, and allowed to become soiled while the manager is on a still hunt for new subscribers.

list of the coming poultry shows for 1904-05. The agricultural papers are awakening to the importance of the poultry industry and helping the cause along. The poultry keepers of the next decade will have a smoother path to tread in than their predecessors.

The world do move, and it is encouraging to note the chicken automobile is keeping right up in the front line of the procession, and as long as the old thing does not catch fire or exceed the speed limit, chances for an accident seem slight.

Those Plymouth Rocks bred in 1875 and illustrated by Theo. Hewes' Inland Poultry Journal are great, but the 14th Street store of Siegle & Co. has in its fowl display some specimens of the Plymouth Rock family that goes them one better, the male having feathers on his shanks. An old Light Brahma rooster has a divorce, for he is all alone.

The poultry farm feature of this big department store has been the recipient of many notices from the different poultry journals throughout the country. If our brothers could see the objects on which they have wasted space, their tears would make a bigger flood than the water used by our street cleaning commissioner in his imported methods of cleaning the city streets.

For the honor of the Plymouth Rock and the credit of the club, let some breeder present these people with a pen of modern Plymouth Rocks that the thousands of visitors who will each day look at them may not be misled.

Two pair of very forward Black Breasted Red Game Bantams are all right in every way, and very forward for this time of year. If some Game enthusiast should happen along and dub the cockerels they would easily be the stars of the exhibit.

No doubt the object intended is purely in the nature of an advertisement to draw the people to the store, but it is a great pity the specimens selected could not have been of a better class of birds.

The American Fancier is published in the interest of all classes of poultry keepers, and is a firm believer in the doctrine and principle that one branch fosters the others. Acting on the request of a reader who wished to have the addresses of dealers that he might always know where to ship his surplus, we have opened a Poultry and Egg Commission Men's column, similar to our Judge and Specialty Club directories. It is up to all interested to see that the card of their sales agent ,if reliable, is numbered in the list.

the custom to hold a good poultry show at Rutland. It is a good custom and we are going to establish it still firmer this year.

There are several strong points which go far towards making the Rutland Show what it is. A fine building and neat exhibition coops gives the show a healthy appearance. The arrangement and classification help to make things attractive. Then we are bound to take good care of the birds. After that we try to make things agreeable for the exhibitors. If the birds come by express or freight we look after them from the start. We get them to the grounds and return them to the carriers; no trouble to you; no expense.

Of course in a poultry show we have to judge the birds, and the show is judged by the birds. However, we can judge a show to some extent by the exhibitors. The class of exhibitors we have had for the last few years means something. The big part of them are fanciers and men who have been heard of before.

In short, Rutland has established a fanciers' show which can be classed only with the few large fall shows of the country.

We sincerely hope to see all our old exhibitors again with us this year, and a goodly number of new ones. We trust that we shall see you. Better send a few of your best bird, anyway.

PUT VERMIN TO ROUT.

There is neither pleasure nor profit in fowls thickly infested with lice, is the sound conclusion imparted to the readers of Vick's Magazine by a lady experienced in the ins and outs of poultry raising. It is impossible to keep a large flock entirely free from them, yet success depends on keeping them in check. Fowls weakened by the constant drain of these parasites fall an easy prey to disease. Besides, no one wants to have the feed given their chickens converted into lice instead of eggs.

"An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." The best preventive measure we have found is to paint the perches late in the afternoon with a strong insecticide. The one we use is coal oil to which has been added as much coal tar and pine tar as it will dissolve. The crude petroleum would be best, as it does not evaporate so quickly; we are unable to obtain that, and so use the same kind that we burn. The lice killer should be applied once a week in summer, and every two weeks in winter. The nests should be painted with it also, except when the eggs are to be used for hatching.

Keep the house reasonably clean—white-wash it thoroughly twice a year and do not spare the whitewash. Put some crude carbolic acid in it.

Clean the droppings from under the perches at least once a week in summer and two or three times in winter. They need removing much oftener in warm, wet weather than when it is dry and cold. Give the hens the opportunity to use a dust bath whenever they desire.

By using these precautions you will rarely have to treat a few separately for lice. When you do, coal oil is still the sovereign remedy. Dip a small sponge in the oil, squeeze it dry, and rub the fowl the wrong way of the feathers under the wings and around the vent. Be careful not to get too much oil on or the fowl's skin will be blistered. This remedy is made more effectual and lasting by adding a little oil of pennyroyal to the kerosene. This mixture is also good to sprinkle on the straw in the nests.

When hens are sitting no oil or grease can be used as it would get on the eggs and they could not hatch. Yet a lousy hen can not be a good sitter. The lice not only make her restless, but they impoverish her blood, thus lowering her temperature as well as her vitality. Dust her liberally with insect powder two or three times while sitting.

For little chicks, turkeys, goslings, and ducklings, the best lice killer and preventive we have found is one that is but little known. I have seen it in but two papers. It is an ounce of fishberries put in a pint of alcohol. We apply it with a small paint brush. Don't put it on the top of the head only, put it under the throat and all around the neck. Lice are more apt to be found on a duckling's neck than on its head. We also apply it around the vent and under the wings. This remedy is quite lasting. We have never made a second application to goslings and ducklings, but have to chickens and turkeys. To find lice on little turkeys look on the wings at the roots of the large flight feathers. A pint of this solution (fishberries and alcohol) is sufficient for several hundred birds; so it is not expensive. It is poisonous; it is said to be as good a remedy for lice on children's heads as of chicken's.

If you should use grease on little chicks never use any that has salt in it, and be sparing of any kind, and keep them dry and warm the next day. Never use coal tar on them, it is entirely too strong. When they are a month old or more if they become lousy, it might do to rub their mother's feathers with a sponge that has been dipped in kerosene and squeezed as dry as possible; this will give each little head a coating sufficient to destroy the lice.

AN ODE TO DAVID.

He judges far and near,
His vision is sublimely clear;
A conscience like a brook crystalline,
His judgment at heart is divine;
But when his whiskered Cochin pet,
He is denied, he grieves, you bet,
And solemnly vows as a Christian elder
That never again he'll judge a Lakenvelder.

Dear Sir: Orr's Mills, N. Y., May 23, 1904.

The second brooder arrived on time and suits me as perfectly as the first. I think you have struck the ideal in a brooder. Have run through three broods and only lost one chick, and that one I killed as it was a weakling. I do not know whether the scientific ventilation is perfect or not, all I do know is that it raises chickens to my satisfaction, and that is all I care about. Yours truly.

POULTRY ON THE FARM.

Poultry raising on the farm has been raised to its proper position. It seems almost impossible to make some farmers believe it is a business that will pay men as well as it will women, and if any farmer has a great number of laying hens, the income would be greater for the amount of capital invested than in any other stock business on the farm. It is repugnant to some farmers to stoop to so small a thing as a chicken and hope to get any profit from it. To such farmers the chickens have been looked upon as scavengers, roosting in the trees, and are considered the property of the old woman and must shift for themselves. The bee keeper does not despise his bees and they are even smaller than hens. It is not the single hen or the single bee that dependence is placed in, but the whole colony or flock working together for profit.

We know of farmers who have good buildings for their horses, cattle and families, who have not place for the poultry. The barn is cleaned regularly every day and sometimes two and three times per day, and they would not think of cleaning the poultry quarters. They feel that there are too many details which are intended only for the women folks of the farm. Like the garden, it goes by default if they do not give it the attention needed. Men feel that they are to attend to horses, and the cows are to be milked, the cattle fed or turned to pasture and there are so many demands on their time that they really have little time to devote to the chicken business.

This is a day of small profits and a frequent turn of the capital. Department stores which sell at a very small profit, depend upon frequent sales for profit, rather than large profits. They would prefer to make fifty sales aggregating $1 profits than to make 10 sales at a profit of half that much. This is the principle and the same may be said of the poultry business. The profits are small, but they are continuous, if the flock is properly managed. We believe there are farmers who barely make expenses, and to such the addition of the poultry business will make the farm render a profit.

What is really needed is to raise the poultry business above the care of the women and children on the farm. We do not propose that they shall have nothing to do with them, for they should have. The women folks should not be required to build and repair the buildings, or do any of the heavy work connected with the business, but they can be depended upon to do the caring for them during the hours when the farmer himself is in the field or in town. The business should be increased as much as the time and range will justify so as to derive as much profit as possible. Eggs are cash at all seasons, and with cheap grain and low prices prevailing for almost every product, why not place a little dependence on the poultry business for some of the income? The larger the stock, the more eggs sold, the greater the income. And so it goes, and this is worthy of the thought of the careful and painstaking farmer.—Poultry Farmer.

POULTRY AT ST. LOUIS.

The Department of Live Stock of the St. Louis exposition has opened the most extended list of classes and offer the largest amount of cash for prizes that has ever been offered for Poultry. There are classes for all Standard breeds and their varieties, also for about all non-standard varieties as well, over twenty-eight thousand dollars in regular and special cash prizes are offered from all sources on Poultry, Pigeons and Pet Stock alone. There will be seven awards in all classes and a special committee has been appointed to look after all stock entered. This committee consists of T. E. Orr, Beaver, Pa., superintendent; Henry Steinmesch, of St. Louis, chairman; U. R. Fishel, Hope, Indiana, and T. F. McGrew, New York city. This committee will have full charge of all Poultry sent to St. Louis. It will be their special charge to care for same.

Henry Tiemann of Baltimore, Md., and George Ewald of Cincinnati, Ohio, will have charge of the Pigeon and Pet Stock department under the guidance of others, all of which insures the very best care possible in this line. The entries in all these departments will close September 10th. All who may be interested should send at once to Col. Charles F. Mills, Department of Live Stock, World's Fair, St. Louis, Mo., for a premium list, always stating that you desire the premium list for Poultry, Pigeons and Pet Stock. This can be had for the asking.

WESTERN CONN. POULTRY ASSOCIATION AGAIN.

We have been keeping rather quiet this summer so far, but we are doing a lot of hustling. We are bound to give the grandest lot of gold specials that has ever been offered in this end of the country. Last season our gold specials were a great drawing card. But this season we expect to more than double them.

We all of us realize that in looking over the different premium lists we are looking to see which one will give us the best inducement to show with them.

This year we have rented the armory, which gives us one of the best lighted show rooms in the state. We are the center for transportation, Directly opposite express office; plenty of coops; extra service; best pair of judges that ever placed a ribbon; plenty of cash in treasury; and the best birds win the gold every time.

Don't forget the dates—Nov. 30, Dec. 1, 2, 3.

THE DAYTON SHOW.

The fourth annual exhibition of the Dayton Fanciers' club will be held at Dayton, Ohio, from Jauary 25th to January 31st, 1905. As in the past, this association has met all of its obligations, and has prospered so well that to-day they own their own coops, and have a neat bank account to begin on. It is officered by some of the best business men of the City of Dayton, and is run on business principles. The show being held late in the season, will give the exhibitor an excellent chance to exhibit his late birds, which this year will be the best. Don't fail to make arrangements to exhibit at this show.

All information cheerfully given by the secretary, Carl W. Lenz, Reibold Building, Dayton, Ohio.

Fowls demand raw animal food. Every one knows how eagerly a fowl will chase clear across a half-acre lot to gobble up a bug or worm. When hens get such food in abundance they lay in abundance. When they are deprived of such food they do not lay so abundantly. Properly cut green bone, with meat and gristle attached, supplies this food in the most available form. The most important element in egg production is that group of nitrogenous substances, such as albumen, which are grouped together under the name of protein. Now raw bone and meat are specially rich in protein. Which does the hen prefer, a live, juicy bug, or a dead, dried-up bug? Why, the live bug every time. It is the raw animal food which she relishes and which does her good. The protein in the raw food is more digestible, she gets more out of it, and it has a peculiar tonic effect on her. It makes her vigorous and active and her comb red. It has the same effect on the whole flock.—The Indian Fanciers' Journal.

HAGERSTOWN HONORS ARE BREAD WINNERS!

LEST WE FORGET: THE GREAT HAGERSTOWN FAIR TAKES PLACE

OCT. 11-12-13-14, '04.

The poultry buildings are the largest in the United States.
The cash prizes are the most liberal offered.
A prize won at Hagerstown is equivalent to one received at New York, Boston, Chicago, or any other great winter show.
It takes good birds to win at Hagerstown for the competion is not local—it is national.
It is a fanciers' show from end to end. Visiting fanciers are "at home" at all times.
The annual parade and banquet are the great features that bring "the clans."
Honors won are bread winners. They sell the stock.
Seven men judge the show, viz: G. O. Brown, J. H. Drevenstedt, D. A. Nichols, F. B. Zimmer, J. F. Craugle, Theodore Hewes and W. J Stanton.
These men have judged before.
Premium lists will be ready August 1st.
The money you win is ready before you go.

If there is anything else you desire to know write to

GEYER'S SCURVY CURE FOR POULTRY was the first article introduced to the public for this purpose, which has been thoroughly tested in the last ten years by many of our brother fanciers who are willing to say with us that there is no other article on the market like this that can be relied on to do its work properly. It is something that the poultry fancier, who appreciates his fine birds, needs very much. What looks more disgraceful than a fine flock of chickens, many, or all of them, having their legs coated with a thick, hard, scabby crust which is called scurvy? It spoils the appearance of the birds and is very annoying to them. It is also contagious. Here we have a sure cure for this ugly disease. By following the directions we guarantee that it will take off that ugly, hard coat and leave the legs clean and smooth and give them their natural color. It also has no equal for healing sores and frosted combs and wattels. It makes them very bright and red. It is just what the exhibitor wants to prepare his birds for the exhibition room. Some of our customers tell us that they have tried it with good results for weak legs. We only ask you to give it a trial. It is put up in tin boxes. Money must accompany all orders. Price, 25 cents. Address, G. A. Geyer, Florin, Pa. 560tf

Crested Screamer

Description of a Very Rare Variety of Waterfowl.

By Henry Scherren, F. Z. S., M.B.O.U.

We must go back to the days of Linnaeus for the first notice of this species. That great naturalist placed it with the Jacanas because of the spurs on the wings and from the fact that one species of the latter group ranges over the country where the Screamers are found. The best book on the habits of both birds is the "Argentine Ornithology" of Mr. W. H. Hudson; and a good deal of information on the same subject will be found in his "Naturalist in La Plata," which is, perhaps, more readily acessible. The Crested Screamer is a noble-looking bird, about the size of a turkey, with a long stout neck and massive legs. The general plumage is slaty-blue with a black collar; the face and neck are white, and the naked skin round the eyes and the legs red. There is an occipital crest, which can be elevated or depressed at will. D'Azara was one of the first to give any particulars relating to this bird, and, in the main, his account has been confirmed by later writers. But he was in error when he stated that Screamers do not swim, but content themselves with wading, and that the number of their clutch was but two; nor was the information he received as to their nesting habits to be depended on. Some of his descriptions, however, were founded on personal observation. Thus he tells us that the sharp, clarion-like cry is heard not only during the day, but also by night if the birds are disturbed. He knew of the down at the base of the feathers in the adults, and of the air-cells between the skin and the flesh which give rise to the crackling sound heard when any part of the body is pressed.

Later authorities placed the Screamers with the Geese, and doubtless there is a relationship. Many points of difference also exist, and it is probably best to regard these birds as springing "from the primary avian stock as an independent offshoot at much the same time as did the other important families." This was the opinion of the late Professor Garrod, and anatomical researches carried out on different lines from those pursued by him indicate that his conclusion was in all probability correct. To take only one particular. In dissecting a Goose, a fowl, a Pheasant, or a Woodcock—at the dinner table with carvers, or in the laboratory with a scalpel and bone scissors—it will be found that the ribs have what are called uncinate processes, which are thin blades of bone attaching each rib to the one immediately behind it. Now, these are found in all living birds except the Screamers. The intestinal canal, with its simple loops, is also very primitive, so that these birds stand practically alone.

Mr. Hudson thinks the species is doomed to extermination, which would seem to be a great pity, for they could perhaps be domesticated in South America, where they associate with the poultry and are said to defend them from the attacks of birds of prey. Though their flesh is dark and coarse-grained, it is excellent eating, with a flavor like that of the Wild Duck; and, says Mr. Hudson, "there is a good deal of meat on a bird with a body larger than that of a Swan." To look at the Screamers in the Gardens one would never imagine that in a wild state they were capable of soaring. Yet there is no doubt of that fact; "they will rise in an immense spiral until they disappear in the zenith," and, considering the great size and dark color of the birds, this shows that the height attained must be very great. Their alarm-cry is loud, and justifies the popular name, but they also sing together with harmonious effect. "The male begins, the female takes up her part, and then with marvellous strength and spirit they pour forth a torrent of strangely-contrasted sounds—some bassoon-like in their depth and volume, some like drum-beats, and others long, clear, and ringing." They sing "all the year round at all hours, both on the ground and soaring. When in pairs the two birds invariably sing together, and when in flocks they sing in concert."

Mr. Lydekker, who was in Argentina, at a later date than Mr. Hudson, amplified the account given by the last-named naturalist as to the breeding habits of these birds. When he visited a lagoon for the purpose of Duck shooting he saw a pair of large birds like huge grey Geese swimming about, and was much puzzled, for, like most people, he had no idea that Screamers were in the habit of swimming. He waded into the water, and forced the birds to take flight, when he was convinced that they were really Screamers. He felt sure they had a nest among the reeds in the middle of the lagoon, where the water was too deep for wading. "I had," he says, "however, reason to believe that the young were already hatched and swimming about among the reeds, so that had I succeeded in reaching the nest my labor would have been in vain." During subsequent visits he nearly always saw the old birds on the water, and said that this pair, at least during the breeding season, might well be described as aquatic.

This species was introduced into the gardens in 1872, and till this year there was never any attempt to pair. But late this spring, almost as soon as the two birds were put out into the the flying aviary in the South Gardens, they mated, and then set about nesting. Two or three spots were selected, only to be abandoned; but when the final choice was made both birds set to work with a will, and completed a large loose structure with a hollow on the top, and the clutch consisted of three eggs.

SILVER WYANDOTTE COCK "VICTOR"

Two facts about the breeding habits, hitherto unknown, have been put on record. The first is, that the period of incubation is six weeks; the second, that the male bird sits alternately with the femals. He would march up to the nest with all the dignity of an old Swan to relieve his mate while she went off to feed. All the eggs were brought off successfully. Unfortunately, the hen bird trod on one of the chicks, which, however, is not altogether lost, for it will be anatomically examined by the secretary, Dr. P. Chalmers Mitchell, who will present a report on the subject to a scientific meeting early next session. The other two growing into sturdy birds. It has been the custom to compare them to goslings. The beak and feet are sufficiently unlike to negative this comparison. The first covering is yellow, but there is no longitudinal striping as in goslings, nor is it downy in character, but filamentous, like the feathers of the Rhea. The yellow hue is now being lost in grey, especially on the back, and whatever resemblance there may have been to goslings has vanished. Mr. Lydekker's surmise as to the chicks being in the reedy water was no doubt correct. The two chicks in the gardens not only enter the pond with their parents, but swim in it, which, on account of its shallowness, the old birds cannot do. They are well cared for by the parents, who watch over them assiduously, and the hen still covers them at night, though they are over a month old. So careful are the old birds of their offspring that when they deserted the nest they made sleeping places for them, covering the spot selected with sticks and twigs; and on one of these, which is not unlike the foundation of a nest, the hen and her chicks pass the night.

This instance of breeding is of very great interest, for it is the first time, so far as is known, that such an event has taken place in captivity. As already stated, two facts new to science have been put on record, and there is reason to hope that the investigations to be made on the anatomy of the dead chick will throw light on the relationship of these birds. One need hardly say, in conclusion, that everyone interested in aviculture should see the chicks for themselves. They are certainly the most noteworthy birds that have been bred in the Regent's Park aviaries for many years. —Feathered World.

CARELESS WAYS OF TURKEY RAISERS.

All through the last of the month ot May and during June, letters reached me asking "What ails my turkeys? They get droopy and soon die." Now, as the writers do not give their way of caring for the fowls it is all guess work on my part.

One lady wanted to know if I could tell her what ailed my turkey. I told her how I feed my turkeys and she thought it too much trouble. A few days later some of our family drove past her house very early in the morning and saw her turkeys with the young poults out in the tall oats. Her question, "What ailed my turkeys?" was answered. In our school readers when I went to school was a sentence that impressed itself on my mind and which I never forgot. It is this: "There is no excellence without great labor."

Those who will not give a certain amount of time and labor to any calling had better leave it for the other more energetic fellow and hunt for something that can be done without work or brains, as there is a great deal of work connected with the poultry business and at least a thimbleful of brains is needed to make a success. I know a lady that claims to be a great poultry raiser who can not tell one hen from another, and if one is ailing never sees that anything is amiss, until it is too late to do anything for it. Her success lies in theory and not in practice, in letting some one else do the work of caring for the fowls.

FIGHTING LICE—RIDDING FOWLS OF PESTS.

It is a hand to hand fight with lice, which I conquer by first putting the old turkey into a box painted with some one of the liquid lice killers, where I let her stay until all lice and nits are killed, and then grease the headse of the little turkeys and dust them with Lambert's Death to Lice, going over them once a week as long as I can handle them, or until I turn them in the field. Many turkey raisers say their fowls cannot be lousy for they have greased them well. There probably lies the trouble—they have greased them too well, as plenty of grease will kill young poultry of any kind. I use only a very little on their heads for the large head lice.

HOW AND WHAT TO FEED.

I have given my way of feeding so many times I hesitate to give it again, but my success has been so good this year. I have lost only one, except by accident, that had bowel trouble. With so large a drove I had not noticed it until it was past cure. I owe a great deal of my success to the large quantities of green food that I give. My feed in the morning is two or three hard boiled eggs to a flock of sixty and a big armful of dandelion leaves chopped fine, and sour milk curd. As the poults get a little older I give oatmeal and wheat when I have it at noon, sour milk curd at night the same as in the morning, except I use a large armful of onions in place of dandelion. To-day my turkeys are out on the range with the loss of only one by sickness, and that might have been avoided if noticed.

PROVIDING FRESH RANGE.

A lady visited our yards a day or two ago and in showing her my turkey coops I told her that I pulled them ahead the length of the coop each morning after the turkeys were turned out. She had lost all of hers. She said, "That is the secret of your success, in always having clean ground for them at night, and I think goes a long ways in making a success." Her husband said, "How do you make them go in?" This is a very easy thing to do.

Their coops are large dry goods boxes with wire netting tacked over a large square hole on one side, which makes them light and airy. I throw in a little corn or some of the little turkey's feed and they go quickly in. I have a lath door that shoves in place with large wooden buttons cut out of a block of good and nailed on. The buttons turned at top hold that securely, and at the bottom a narrow strip of board is nailed on and the lath door dropped inside of the strip holds it securely at the bottom.

My way of housing is my own plan, trying to cater to turkey taste as much as possible, as I recognize that all animals have an individuality the same as human beings. They have their likes and dislikes and their taste for certain kinds of food. They even show their preference for different persons who care for them. If a stranger comes around when I coop them at night it is sometimes almost impossible to make the turkeys go into their coops. If I am very tired or nervous they seem to recognize the fact and grow contrary accordingly.

DIFFERENT VARIETIES OF TURKEYS.

I notice that there was a long discussion about admitting or retaining the Buff Turkey in the Standard, claiming that a buff did not really exist, some of the judges saying that they had not met a buff in all their circuit of judging. Several years ago I had a call for a trio of Buffs and a trio of Blacks and a trio of Bronze, to go to Germany. The Bronze I had, but not the Buff or Black. I got Judge McClave to get me a magnificent trio of Blacks. I wrote to a man that I knew at Mount Carroll, Ill., who had been a breeder of Buffs, but he had given them up and referred me to another breeder of Mount Carroll, who sent me a pair that was genuine buff, wings and all,the wings of a good deal lighter buff, but buff all the same. They were small, as that breed is, and that probably accounts for their not being more popular. I think a standard-bred Buff would be hard to find now as the Bronze is so much more popular on account of size and plumage that they have outdistanced the Buffs.

AN EXPERIENCE WITH BOURBON REDS.

Such a thing as Bourbon Reds had not come before the public, although they appear to be a native bird and are quite popular in some localities. Their appearance for competition in the show room is not over three or four years ago, as I know to my cost. An editor of a certain poultry paper asked me to get all the information I could about the Bourbon Reds and write an article about them. I wrote to different breeders of them, hunted up their origin as near as I could, which I found was from a wild breed first found in Kentucky, and one or two of our nearby western states.

The article, when published, brought me a deluge of letters which cost me days of time and dollars of postage to answer, and, although the Bourbon Reds are probably a good breed, my experience with the loss of time and postage has not given me a very favorable impression of booming a breed that I was not at all interested in. But I want to make it plain that there has been a Buff with a buff wing, as I owned a trio a short time. And by the way, one of the hens of the nine turkeys en route for Germany died in New York Harbor, and if any one doesn't believe she has a buff wing, he can satisfy his doubt by fishing her up and looking her wing over. It was a good many years ago, and if her wing retains the color it will prove that she was the genuine article. When I made another shipment of turkeys to the same party in Germany I sent another buff hen from the same breeder, and she too had a true buff wing.—Mrs. Chas. Jones in Poultry Keeper.

TURKEYS.

Standard Varieties and Management.

SELECTION AND TREATMENT OF BREEDING STOCK.

There are some rules that must be followed in the selection of turkeys for breeding, if it is hoped to succeed. Careless neglect has given no end of trouble to turkey raisers. In some instances which the writer has investigated, all the turkeys owned in one locality have descended from the one original pair purchased many years before. In one case it was said that for twenty years no new blood had come into the neighborhood. If this foolish procedure had been continued it would have resulted in the destruction of the constitutional vigor of the turkeys.

A few plain rules which may be observed to advantage are as follows:

First|—Always use as breeders turkey hens over one year old. Be sure they are strong, healthy and vigorous, and of good medium size. In no instance select the smaller ones. Do not strive to have them unnaturally large.

Second.—The male may be a yearling or older. Do not imagine that the large overgrown males are the best. Strength, health, and vigor,with well-proportioned medium size are the main points of excellence.

Third.—Avoid close breeding. New blood is of vital importance to turkeys. Better send a thousand miles for a new male than to risk the chances of inbreeding. Secure one in the fall so as to be assured of his health and vigor prior to the breeding season.

Kind of hens to select.—No matter what variety of turkeys may be selected for the keeping they should above all things, be strong, vigorous, healthy, and well matured, but not akin. Better secure the females from one locality and the male from another to insure their nonrelationship, rather than run the risk of inbreeding. In all fowls it is well to remember that size is influenced largely by the female and the color and finish by the male. Securing overlarge males to pair with small weakly hens is not wise policy.

A medium-sized male with good fair-sized females of good constitutional vigor and mature age will do far better than the largest with the smallest females. The wise farmer always selects the very best corn or grain of all kinds for seed; equal care should be given the selection of breeding stock in turkeys. The best raised on the farm should be reserved for producers, and the fact should be kept in mind that turkey hens of the best quality in their second or third year of laying make the best producers. your best young hens with this in view. Undersized hens that lack constitutional vigor are not of the least value for producing poults. The medium sized, well-formed hens that have good strong bone and constitutional vigor are the kind to select for successful turkey growing.

Kind of males to select.—When we stop to consider that the male turkey is one-half of the entire flock in the matter of breeding we may be led to greater care in his selection. None can be too good for the purpose; constitutional vigor is of first importance; without this he can not have any value whatever for the purpose intended. Plenty of bone, a full, round breast,and long body are important. No matter of what stock or breeding the hen may be, the male should be selected from some of the standard varieties. He will carry with him the influence of his breeding. If the hens are of some standard variety, a male of the same variety should be selected so as to maintain the stock in its purity. Well-selected individuals of some one of the standard varieties will give better results than can be secured by cross-breeding, which has a tendency to bring to the surface the weak points of both sides of the cross. Proper crosses may improve the first issue; if followed up, they rarely prove successful.

Number of females to one male.—The best rule for mating is to have four or five females to one male; some say twelve, and the writer has heard of a fine hatch and vigorous poults from a two-year-old tom with twenty hens; but this is unusual. When they are yarded and from eight to ten females are kept, it is better to have two toms and keep one shut up while the other is with the hens, changing them at least twice a week. When they run at large on a farm they will naturally divide into flocks; under such conditions one male to not more than six females is best.

Range for turkeys.—Turkeys may be yarded successfully when desirable. The larger the area available, however, the better the development. Young, growing turkeys, to do well, must have a range. It is not advantageous to keep turkeys on a small, confined place. Some have done well with them on 8 to 20 acres. Only a few can be grown in this way, and it shows the result of excellent care and consideration when success is attained in such limited quarters.

A wide range of territory for them to go over undisturbed is of vital importance; here they will select the kind of food most to their liking. In the early spring and summer season such a range furnishes plenty of food and exercise for the breeding stock, and later the finest feeding grounds for the growing poults.

Best condition for breeding stock.—In caring for the breeding stock avoid having them too fat. When they can go about the barns and granaries they may become overfat. Boiled oats should be fed them when they have a tendency to become so; wheat and some corn may also be fed to advantage. They should not be allowed to become too fat during the winter months, nor should they be allowed to go hungry or underfed. Where they have the run of the farm there is but little danger of their lacking food, if any stock whatever is fed on the place. They are untiring foragers, and at times greatly reduce their condition by hunting unsuccessfully for food. Wheat, oats, barley, and corn should be scattered about on the ground where they may pick the grains up a kernel at a time. They must have plenty of fresh water, also grit and shell-forming material of some kind. They will travel quite a distance to visit a spring or stream of water, and eagerly devour bugs and beetles during the summer months.

One cause of inbreeding.—In mating it is quite unusual for the male to pair with the female more than once for a clutch of eggs, and hens will wander miles if necessary for this opportunity. Through this very natural cause has come the danger of destructive inbreeding in localities where growers who keep but few turkeys depend upon the one male in the neighbodhood, who too often pairs with his own descendants, thus causing a lack of vitality in the young poults.

Roosting places.—Turkeys do better when they can roost in the open. If well fed, they will thrive more in the shelter of the trees than in a close, confined house. The troubles that arise from allowing them to live in the trees are that they become wild and frequently are stolen. If housed, their quarters should be airy, roomy, and perfectly clean. It is not wise to have them roost with other poultry. If found necessary to confine them, all that is needed is a shed or house that will protect them from the elements and marauders of all kinds, and at the same time not be too confining for them. Place the roosts well up from the floor, and keep the interior perfectly clean and free from vermin.

In localities where it is not too cold during the winter months, it is better to allow the breeding stock to roost out in the open, either in the trees, or upon roosts prepared for them by planting posts that project about 8 feet above the ground. Upon these place long poles about 2 or 2½ inches in diameter for roosts. Roosting places of this kind are better sheltered when located on the south side of a barn or building. The writer has seen a flock of turkeys which go the year round to such a roost; they belong to one of the most successful turkey growers of Rhode Island, and they live continually in the open, not having even the shlter of the trees.

Buildings.—In colder climates, where shelter must be provided, a house may be built that is fashioned after many of our poultry houses with the slanting roof; an open ventilator should be placed in front, close to the roof, and never be closed except in cold weather. The roosts should be placed on a level in the front of the house, with a sliding or rolling door in the rear. Only light enough is needed for the turkeys to see the way to and from the roosts. The door should be left open all day that they may come and go at pleasure. Within this house they may be fed in cold, snowy weather.

In the cold northern climate of Canada one of the most successful turkey growers has a double-inclosed apartment house for his breeding stock in winter, connected with which is an inclosed run that will protect them from the elements, at the same time furnishing opportunity for open-air exercise during the day. This kind of house is most useful in cold climates, but it might be used in all localities and prevent midnight marauders of all kinds from carrying away the turkeys.

HEN LAYS BANANA EGGS.

The following yarn was started in the Philadelphia papers last week and is making the rounds:

The story of the marvelous gray hen that laid the wonderful egg is given publicity herewith because that gallant son of the sea, Skipper Pettersen, of the fruit steamer Beacon, vouches for it. The port has been a stranger to a tale like it for many a day. But remembering that Captain Pettersen has a reputation for veracity that has never been shaken, the story will be believed.

The Beacon was here yesterday from Port Antonio, Jamaica. Besides the unheard of species of fowl and the equally unheard of egg the steamer brought a cargo of bananas as big as she ever carried 'tween her decks.

A GIFT BIRD, TOO.

The bird which forms the basis if this yarn was a gift from a valued friend of the skipper in Port Antonio. In size it differed little from the ordinary barnyard bird of Pennsylvania. Its color, however, was a pure gray. Nothing else.

When Captain Pettersen cast off from Port Antonio he had the hen cooped and then had coop and hen carried to the bridge, where he could keep an eye upon both. As the vessel left Port Antonio behind it was noticed that the fowl gazed ever homewards. She never cackled, however. Silence marked her conduct.

Night came, and coop and bird were taken upon deck and given into the care of the first mate. Then morning followed. Then an experiment was tried, only, however, after the bird's wings had been clipped to prevent its flying into the sea. It was released from the coop. It became friendly. It was voted a treasure and likewise voted the ship's mascot, and then given the entire liberty of the vessel.

BANANA DIET SEQUEL.

Then experiment No. 2 was tried. It was given a banana diet. Wonderful results. Let him who says that a chicken's laying is not regulated by its diet hold his peace. He is wrong. After a day's feeding upon the bananas this marvellous gray Jamaica hen wandered into the room of the third engineer, and here took place the wonderful result of the banana diet.

The gray fowl from Jamaica cuddled upon the lounge. Then she began to cluck cheerfully. When she left that lounge there lay upon the centre of it an egg, marvellous and unique. It was the size and color of a small, ripe banana.

A BANANA-SHAPED EGG.

That wonderful egg was passed about the ship. No one had ever seen anything like it. Think of the hen's achievement a second time: A beautiful banana-shaped egg of a golden color!

"Now, wasn't that wonderful, and isn't the gray hen from Jamaica a marvellous bird?" Captain Pettersen asked this. The reporter bravely agreed that it was.

COW-PEAS FOR POULTRY.

In New England the white bean is the favorite, but the cow-pea (which is a bean) is so easily grown, and seems to thrive on such a diversity of soils, that it should be grown by those interested in poultry. The cow-pea contains about eighty pounds of dry matter in every one hundred pounds (twenty pounds being water), of which dry matter twenty-one pounds are protein (muscle-forming matter), one and one-third pounds fat, fifty pounds starchy matter and three pounds mineral matter. The vines are also rich in those substances. Compared with cow-peas, corn contains about eight-eight pounds of dry matter in one hundred pounds. The other twelve pounds are water,and of the dry matter about ten pounds are protein, five pounds fat, seventy pounds starch and one and one-half pounds mineral matter. Cow-peas contain about twice as much protein as corn, and also twice as much mineral matter (lime, etc.), while corn contains more fat than cow-peas, and a much larger proportion of starch. Fowls are very fond of cow-peas, and such food is wholesome as well as excellent, being worth more than twice as much as corn for egg-production, and can be easily grown, though probably not yielding as many bushels to the acre as corn.—Farm and Fireside.

POULTRY POINTS.

A poorly bred thoroughbred is worse than a scrub.

Starting a poultry flock with dunghills is like doing work with dull tools.

Excessive hot weather, like excessive cold weather, will cripple the egg crop.

Make a study of your breed. It is not only interesting, but instructive, work.

Success with poultry is due to one thing—comfort. When a hen is comfortable it is an indication that she is in good health, and has proper feed and care.—Farm Journal.

When a man with a ten dollar advertisement wants two hundred dollars' worth of reading notices, there is trouble ahead all along the line. A reasonable mention of the stock of a reliable advertiser and breeder is always in order; a deliberate "puffing up" of a big breeder, regardless of the feelings of other good advertisers and the fact that the B. I wish to offer you my hearty congratulations on the many improvements you have made to your American Fancier, both in arrangement and paper. Your publishing of the entire list of awards, irrespective of whether the winnings were by your advertisers or not, does more to keep the fancy poultry business, I believe, than the publishing of partial list. The Johnstown show, scheduled for November 16 to 19, has been postponed until some early month in 1905. The reason for this is: The World's Fair exhibition at St. Louis preceding and the Herald Square show following it, makes it difficult to maintain the class of entries that has given the Johnstown show a national reputation. In order to preserve the high standard of the past, the executive committee of the Adirondack Poultry Club has deemed it advisable to select dates in 1905 that will bring out the best birds from the best fanciers.

"We cannot understand why more of the Michigan Poultry Association do not secure the services of F. W. Travis or C. A. Bloss for judging, as both are just as capable of scoring birds correctly as half the judges that will appear in Michigan the coming winter. They say the American people like to get fooled, and some of the breeders will get a good dose of it this coming winter."

So it is really possible to fool people with score cards! How strange?

Here is a good tip for poultry raisers, taken from the Rural New Yorker:

"It is difficult to buy Alfalfa hay in eastern markets. This is because the hay is bulky, and feeders are not well acquainted with it. In Syracuse, N. Y., we understand the hay sells readily at $12.50 a ton. Alfalfa has been grown near that city until livery stable keepers know what the hay is. It is now proposed in California to grind Alfalfa hay into a coarse meal and sell it in bags, or pressed into cakes. This will save bulk and preserve the feeding value of the hay, but few besides poultry keepers will buy it until it has been well advertised and exploited. We have known people to pay high prices for cotton hulls with a small amount of meal mixed with them who would balk at paying a fair price for ground Alfalfa.

"What is the best bedding for the bottom of coops containing birds that are shipped from one show to another in the fall?" An exhibitor asks the above. The best bedding is sea-shells. They are clean, furnish a fair amount of grit material and can easily be cleaned with water and used during the entire circuit. Besides, they keep the feet in clean condition.

FOWL DEEDS OF FOWL MEN.

There was an exciting game of ball at Sammonsville yesterday afternoon between the Glass-Arms and the Butter-Fingers.

The game was played as a curtain-raiser to the outing of the Adirondack Poultry and Pet Stock club, and it was a game such as is rarely seen. It is reported that Ebbets, the manager of some piking ball team in Brooklyn, who hangs around Johnstown looking for players to improve his club, was concealed in an upper room of Duane Hillabrandt's hotel, keeping an eye out for promising timber. He didn't stay long.

The Glass-Arms put Barney Mosher in the box and his rural free delivery puzzled the Butter-Fingers so much that ninety-seven runs were made in the first inning. They went out because they were tired of running.

Bill Ging Drevenstedt, in the box for the Butter-Fingers, talked back to the umpire so much that he was sent into a neighboring cornfield to chase flies. Never succeeding in finding the ball he kept throwing back over the fence so many young pumpkins that there will be a shortage of pie in Sammonsville this fall. Frank Miller played short for the Glass-Arms. "Give me a good one;" he cried. A nice easy one came to him, and it slipped through his fingers and hit him on the cheek. "Ah," he murmured, and that was all.

The players showed great skill in catching the hot ones with their feet, all except Gil Haggart, who leaped over them as if he were the cow jumping over the moon. Prince Henry Quilhot, the accomplished chauffeur, knocked the ball into three fragments and then borrowed another one of a trusting boy who nearly wept when he saw it vanishing into the corn field where Drevenstedt was on guard. It took half an hour to find it.

The more lady-like members of the expedition devoted themselves earnestly to the game of croquet, but this was constantly interrupted by the interference of the grandfather of the diamond finding Jamie Knox, who kept purloining the balls and handing them over to Hercules Streeter to knock down to Fonda. In this illegal proceeding he was aided and abetted by Oliver Getman, who evidently disapproved of grown men playing croquet.

Having successfully broken all the baseballs and croquet mallets, the players adjourned to the hotel, where Gil Haggart's beautiful soprano mingled with the deep bass of the well-diggers from Fultonville, while the rich Dago baritone of some men who might have been operatic singers if the managers had not heard them first added a plaintive wail to the melodies that made the dogs of the neighborhood throw back their heads and join in the chorus.

Dr. Beebe, who had been running bases as if it was for Congress, and Will Chamberlain, who had served as home-plate in the baseball game, then began to sniff the breezes with expectant looks. Soon supper was announced, and the gathered guests all tried to get through the dining room door at the same time, leading to a congestion of traffic that was only relieved when Oliver Getman put down his head and ploughed through the crush like a center rush bucking the line for three yards.

Over the early part of the proceedings at the festal board we draw a veil. The table was prettily decorated with ferns and golden glow, most of the latter being promptly appropriated by the acquisitive Getman for the adornment of the collector of croquet balls. The consumption of chicken, green corn and other things too numerous to mention was nothing short of disgraceful. It was evident that nobody at the table had had anything at all to eat for at least a week, and if Duane Hillabrandt is able to feed another party during the month he'll have to send away for the provisions. The record was made by Bill Ging Drevenstedt, who ate seven whole chickens and eighteen ears of corn, not counting potatoes and salad taken to fill in the interstices.

When cigars were lighted Frank Miller was installed as toastmaster, after vainly endeavoring to shift the burden of his guilt upon an entirely innocent person.

Then everybody was forced to say something, and the speeches were greeted with tumultuous applause, real thunder, engaged for the occasion, coming in just at the right time. The most remarkable discourse was that of the Czar of Fultonville, who told about the desperate effort of his realm to get water. Nobody at the table had ever heard that there was a demand for water at Fultonville, and the general impression still remains that the well digging is merely a pretext to cover the excavation of a tunnel under the Mohawk to the Hotel Roy at Fonda.

Later in the evening, while the rain rained, a meeting of the club was held at which the resignation of A. E. Blunck, president of the club, was accepted, and J. H. Drevenstedt was elected to fill the vacancy thus made. Aaron H. Putman, W. W. Chamberlain, C. I. Combes and C. E. Taylor were elected members of the club. The show which was to have been given by the club this fall was postponed until next year, on account of other shows whose dates conflict.

Then the horses were sorted out and the various parties started home. It was a dark night, but most of the drivers kept the road almost half the way.

Those present were: J. H. Drevenstedt, Charles M. Knox, Oliver Getman, Lucius F. Streeter, Frank Miller, H. J. Quilhot, Gilbert Haggart, Edward Lorentz, C. I. Combes, B. W. Mosher, Aaron H. Putman, Charles Eisenmann, Dr. Beebe, C. E. Taylor, Johnstown; H. S. Wemple, M. S. Wemple, William J. Weeper, Fultonville.—Johnstown Republican, Aug. 18.

ATTEND THE COUNTY FAIRS.

As it is nearing show season and the county fairs are pulling off their shows, a great many birds will exchange hands. And the price will be cheap; many a flock will be spoiled because the bird is to be sold cheap. But if you lack judgment, ask the advice of the judge or some honest breeder, and you are very apt to get good advice. That is how I got it. Ask good, reasonable questions and not try to make the judge believe you know more than he does. If it is a Wyandotte you want, and you know what you want, you need ask only such questions that are doubtful ones.

If there ever was a breed that needs a guardian over its shape it is the Wyandotte. As much as has been written on this one thing, shape, we don't seem to be much nearer to the ideal. Someone is to blame. And who is it? Must we put it off on the judge or the breeders? In the first place if the judge would do his duty in the show room it would make breeders careful. Because a Blue and Red winner is used for a breeder more than he ought to be for getting shape into the flock. No matter how we mate such birds, as a rule such birds will do more to keep down that very thing that we are trying to keep up, in order to reproduce themselves. How often we hear one say in the show room, His shape might be a little off, but his color carried him through. There is no use talking. The shape needs drilling into our mind's eye like a piece of music, until we can see the notes to the staff before us. So with the shape. We must see it before us at all times, so strong that little fads cannot creep before our eyes and make us give way to them. It is very true the Wyandotte shape is a very difficult thing to describe. But we have got to learn from others and by comparing birds. It is a shape unlike the Plymouth Rock, as some take it to be some times. I have been told that Single Comb Wyandottes have been shown as White Plymouth Rocks. But that day has gone by. But most breeders get them too much like the Hamburg shape. I have always thought that if you work for the right shape breast and back you will come out about right, for the right shape back is a guide for the tail and with the right breast you get a good profile. Also all the other sections are not to be forgotten, for they must be prominent. The head is the most conspicuous section. At first glance you notice the head. With a nice comb and good sized head, nice and round, with a good expression, not a wild look but a calm Wyandotte expression, and must show vigor, for if we don't get vigor in the head where must we look for it? Now the tail is the finish part of any bird, and the Wyandotte is no exception. But birds seem to win with tails on them anywhere from a game tail to a squirrel tail. This may not seem true, but it is. And right here is where breeders are to blame, for who can get a good Wyandotte back from such a tail, for the tail plays more of an important part in the band than some breeders are aware of. I expect a great many will score me for this tail business and cut me 99 points for lack of knowledge, and then sit up all night in order to see what to do with the 100th point. But I don't care anything about that. There are a great many more points about a bird that are as much value to some flocks as tail and head, but it would take too much space to tell it all. But my object is to those that are about to buy a breeder and will see a great many at our fairs, and may want to improve on some section. But look to the shape first. But don't lose sight of the minor points, for a small point and a very small one at that will disqualify a bird with a fine shape. My advice is, when you know what you want and see what you want and can buy it, don't stop for a little extra money. Because if you are after that bird it will pay you to buy it. You may never get as good a chance again. If it is only half matured, beware, for no matter what it promises it may go all to pieces. But first ask advice and if its sire is good, all right; if not, better wait and attend a winter show and look over the classes. And don't be afraid to make some new acquaintances. You may have to speak first, but it will pay you and get some advice that may be of some use to you some day. The poultry shows are good educators in more than one way; at least, I find them so. When we used to have a state fair here I used to meet fanciers from all New England and Middle Atlantic states; and I haven't forgotten them yet, either, as I learned something at that fair I owe my success to, from judges and exhibitors alike. As long as no one man knows it all and we use our own judgment, taking advice of others when it is needed, you will feel as though you were fully paid for your trip to the poultry department of any show or fair.

A FEW TIMELY SUGGESTIONS OF VALUE.

Give the growing chicks plenty of room in their weaning coops.

Clean the coops every morning and air them thoroughly, and keep the coops off the ground so they will be sure to have dry floors.

Cleanliness is a health promoter, disease preventive and makes your flock profitable.

Arrange your ventilation of the weaning coops at the sides at the top and so they will open out from the bottom. In this way they can be opened when it is raining and no rain will go in.

Don't forget to put away a few barrels or boxes of dry road dust for winter use. It will come in handy when the ground is frozen or muddy.

Get rid of the surplus cockerels as soon as they are of salable size. They eat up the profits.

Don't forget to provide a supply of grit for the yarded fowls. They soon exhaust this natural supply, and going without grit results in indigestion.

Now that the fowls have begun to molt give two tablespoonfuls of linseed meal to every three quarts of mixed food, twice a week.

Water standing in vessels in the sun at this time of year soon becomes unfit for use. Replenish frequently and keep it in the shade.

When feeding grain of any kind to a large flock it should be scattered over quite a space, so as to insure opportunity for all the fowls to get a suitable portion. Fowls are like human beings in many respects; some want more than their share, some are hoggish, others ill-natured, some domineering and some exceedingly meddlesome. When the allotment of food is spread out in a small space some of the chickens exercise all their undesirable traits to the annoyance of others. When the food is properly distributed these busybodies have got to attend to their eating or lose their chance by running around, and they soon recognize the situation, so that the result is the whole flock can get their rations in comparative quiet.

It is better to feed two or more kinds of grain at one time—helps to balance ration, results in better digestion and keeps the flock in better health.

Time to begin to put the henhouse in complete condition for fall weather.

There is no time in the care of poultry when there can be a "let up" or neglect without a penalty. Neglects in any business have their costs; system in any occupation is a source of economy.

Remember that summer and fall care make the winter layers. Eggs in winter is where the profit in poultry keeping comes from. The hens that start into the winter in good condition soon pay for their whole winter's board in eggs.

It is better for a farmer to keep one pure breed of poultry. Keeping more than one breed requires fencing to keep them separate ,and the extra breed is the cause of much unnecessary trouble and expense. Good authorities have declared, and the actual experience of many has also proved, that success in poultry keeping depends more on the caretaker than on the breed. One man will make a wonderful success with, say, Plymouth Rocks. A neighbor will buy a lot of the man's stock and make a comparative failure. Man and his methods in one instance makes the success, and the man without methods, and perhaps also not having an overabundance of ambition, fails. In both instances the results attained are merely the harvest of effort and the lack of it.

At this season of the year the night-prowling enemies of poultry begin to visit the poultry yards. Mink, weasels, skunks, oppossums, rats and other "varments' 'are liable to visit farms, especially those near woods, ravines or small streams, at night. See that all small and weaning coops are securely closed and that all windows and other openings necessary for ventilation are properly covered with fine strong wire netting. Neglecting this may cost not only one or two chicks in a night, but a score or more. —Baltimore Sun.

THE GLASGOW MEMORIAL.

In response to what seemed to be the wish of the Fancy, "The American Exhibition Game and Game Bantam Club," and "The National Bantam Association," passed resolutions favoring the collecting of a fund to be known as The John Glasgow Memorial, for the purpose of perpetuating the name of that true fancier who was called to rest November 18th last; with this fund to secure a Memorial that may be competed for annually in the memory of Mr. Glasgow.

We have been selected to receive cash donations to this fund and invite you to become a committee of one to solicit from yourself and friends cash donations and send same as prompt as possible to either of us. No donation can be either too large nor too small; all are invited to contribute, and we trust that you will be prompt in responding to this tribute of respect to the memory of our fellow fancier.

Respectfully yours,

The luckiest man in New York is a squatter on the upper west side. His shanty sets in the center of some departed Knickerbocker's unimproved property, and among the tangled masses of weeds and grass a likely flock of games and game chickens chase the festive Manhattan bug, all unconscious of the fact the land they tread on, if converted into cash, would buy all the game fowls in the country.

The American Poultry Journal for August publishes some diagrams of fowl anatomy, that to a poultry keeper with a practical turn of mind will look like money in the bank.

There is no use disguising the fact, we know none too much about this subject. Any of us with the right kind of tool can take a machine apart, but to put it together is the trying part; it takes a mechanic to do that. For this reason, if one is going to keep poultry, get a copy of the above publication and file it away; then if you want to cut up the old hen and have the necessary nerve, the know-how will be in reach of your hand.

An authority states, "a moulting hen does not stop laying if her health is perfect." Pardon me, they do. In isolated cases where they do not, once they lay out their litter, they won't be worth a five-cent piece to their keeper for the following six months.

A prolific laying hen needs and earns a rest, and nature will see that she gets it, and nature's set vacation time is the moulting period.

It is to the interest of the poultryman to make these seasons of idleness as short as possible. This he can do by feeding those foods high in animal substances, thereby hastening the moult.

Once the moult is finished, a hen in good condition is bound to lay a litter of eggs. That's one reason why it does not pay to sell such a hen, to put an uncertain pullet in her place. It costs no more to carry a hen through the moult than to feed a pullet for the same length of time preceding the laying period, if as much, and what do you get in return? Large, handsome, salable eggs, instead of small and unsalable ones.

You have a built-up structure that will return you a profit throughout the winter, and next spring lay eggs from which the strongest kind of chickens can be hatched. The hatching season over, these hens, having fulfilled their mission in life, the majority of them can be turned off at a fair price, and the program gone over with the last season's pullets, now young hens.

The philosophy of all this is the saving of the time and money necessary to raise a certain percentage of each season's laying stock and gives a more satisfactory egg for the market and spring hatching.

"Eggs at half price," says a writer. Like robbing a grave to discuss this subject at this time,—a garment that has been well worn by the chicken professors, years ago. I took the matter seriously myself. Dear reader, make this matter a business proposition. On your eggs you put the price; on your neighbor's eggs let his put the price. Don't worry if his price be higher or lower than your own; don't butt in on that account—he has a perfect right to give his away if he wishes; you the same. Some eggs are dear at any price for hatching purposes. Therefore I say, let each breeder hold his price or knife it as his fancy dictates, but once an order is received fill it in such a way your conscience tells you you have given a hundred cents in value for every dollar received.

My word for it, in after years the moments and incidents that bring letters from satisfied customers to your memory will be the most pleasant of your poultry-keeping experience.

ONE WAY OF MAKING EGG-EATING HENS.

A man sees an empty orange crate in the village store, and says to the grocer: "Give me that, will you? It's just what I want for a couple of hens' nests." He takes it home and nails it up in the henhouse, putting two inches or so of straw in the bottom. The hens like that nest and lay six or eight eggs in it; the next hen that jumps into the nest is a heavy one, and her toe smashes an egg. As she turns to cuddle the eggs under her she sees the most delicious morsel that a hen ever tasted, plunges her beak into it and greedily sucks it up; then eats the shell and begins to scratch to get the last particle of it, throwing the eggs against the side of the box and perhaps breaking another, which is also eaten. Next day she goes to scratching again in that nest, remembering what a treat she found there, and breaks another egg, and now your confirmed egg eater is formed. The remedy, in the case of that hen, is to cut off her head. But prevention is much better; have no nest that a hen has to jump down into. Fill all nests to within four inches of top, so the hens can step from the edge into the nests, and the liability of having egg eaters in the flock will be very much lessened.

I make nests in this way: Take some half-inch boards 14 inches wide; saw off four pieces four feet long; nail three cleats (½x1x14 inches) across, one 14 inches from the end, one 14 inches above that, and one 14 inches above the second; nail three cleats at same distance on another four-foot piece. These are the two outside boards; the other two have six cleats, three on each side; these cleats are for the bottom boards of the nest to rest on. Saw off nine pieces 14 inches long, stand the cleated boards on edge and put three of these 14-inch pieces between them, resting on bottom cleats, also three at top. Saw off three pieces 44 inches long, six inches wide, and nail on even with top edge of the cleats; this makes the front of the nests. Nail on similar pieces to make the back. Stand it up and you have 12 nests, three on the ground, the other nine with board bottoms. These nests will stand anywhere in the coop; do not touch the building, so if they get lousy the coop does not; can be taken out of the coop, nest stuff burned, bottoms taken out, and all parts whitewashed, and I think are much preferable to a lot of boxes nailed up around the building, which if they get lousy are sure to infest the house. I like to have all the appliances in a henhouse separate from the building. My roost platforms stand on legs and do not touch the house, and I am very seldom bothered with lousy buildings.—G. A. Cosgrove in the Rural New Yorker.

WHAT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED BY AMERICAN POULTRYMEN.

To get an idea of the great improvement made in poultry in this country within several decades, principally through the efforts of members of the American Poultry Association, it is only necessary to recall to mind the status of fancy poultry therein, writes George M. Ditter, of Ohio, in an unidentified exchange. About 40 years ago, when the craze for the "big breeds," the Asiatics was on, the assertion, "There is nothing for either eggs or the pot that can compare with them," didn't appear to be copyrighted by considerable.

I remember of a neighbor farmer who, in addition to that, added, with great pride, "Why, my Shanghai rooster can stand on the ground and eat corn off the top of a flour barrel," which was surely a high recommendation.

Of the Asiatics at the time were the Shanghai, Brahmas, Cochins and Chittagongs. There was several years' contention as to which of the breeds or varieties was the best as an all-purpose fowl, the Shanghais at first leading in popular favor, but soon after supplanted by the Brahmas, and later on by the Cochins. There was also quite a split of the then comparatively few fanciers as to "whether the Cochins, Brahmas and Shanghais were varieties or distinct breeds," and it yet looks as if the split is still there.

About the only undebatable real breeds of the period were the Black Spanish, Dorking, Game, Hamburg and Leghorn; the second, third and fourth also in varieties, and, while the Black Spanish will likely ever remain what he was then and still is, the Leghorn of the time, the origin of which was then unknown, did not seem to last very long in the suit that he wore. He was thus described at the time: It resembles in size and form the Creole fowl, the neck and feathers of the cock a pure white, while those of the hen were marked with small black spots running into a grizzle; the tail feathers darker, with transverse black bars." What a novelty that fowl, which was the only representative of itself, would be to at least the younger portion of our today fancires!

The well-known and truly valuable fowl of the then "common" varieties, the Dominique, stood so far out ahead of its associates that it might in justice have been classed as a breed. It is generally conceded that from it our present popular Plymouth Rock was evolved.

Such, then, was about the condition of poultry prior to the time of the American Poultry Association's ad-

ORIGIN OF LANGSHAN.

Editor American Fancier: Knowing your generosity in allowing space in your valuable journal for the purpose for having every breed or variety placed before the public in the right light I take the liberty to make a few remarks regarding Mr. Rumbold's article on Light Brahma in your August 6th issue, in which it seems he would have readers believe that the Langshans originated from them. He claims the birds from which the Light Brahmas originated were imported in 1848. According to history of the Langshans these birds were not known until we find in a letter addressed to Major Croad by a nephew residing in China, Nov. 27, 1871, in which we find the following:

"The fowls I am sending you are very fine, their plumage is of a bright glossy black. I am told that their flesh is excellent. The Chinese say that they are allied to the wild turkey. They are valuable birds. You must be careful of them and get them acclimated by degrees."

These birds arrived in England Feb. 14th, 1872. We also find reference being made to them by a gentleman stationed in Langshan, China, in 1862 and 1863. When he asked these people how long these birds had been there reply was they did not know; they were always there so far as we have been able to ascertain. These birds have always been known as being black with the exception of reference to some Whites received in a shipment from China in 1886 by Mr. Kresling of California, which if we are not mistaken, is the first definite knowledge we have of the White worth mentioning. What information we have been able to accumulate, we are under the impression the Langshans are a distinct breed, and in this we believe we are upheld by the oldest breeders of them and not as Mr. Rumbold would have us believe, as being descendants of the Light Brahmas. Furthermore, as these birds were not known till 1872 in England, and this we believe is the first record we have of any being exported from China to any country, and as this article does not mention any black birds among the importation of 1848, we fail to see why the Light Brahma should be entitled to the honor of being the origin of the Langshan. Without any reflection on the Light Brahma, which we admire, we consider the Langshan the ideal bird and as pure blooded as any breed. We hope readers will consider this article for the protection of the origin of the Grand Langshan.

ENGLISH CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor American Fancier:

I must begin with the sorry confession that my best writing has not unfrequently been mistaken for bad spelling. In my letter that appeared in your valuable journal on July 15th it should have been "the white of the Langshan eggs reminds me of that of the Plover's egg." I know your "Langshan" breeders will agree with me that the white of the Langshan egg is exceedingly white, but I am here speaking of the substance or quality. Another mistake I must own to is, that crop instead of cross occurs in one or two instances. May I be allowed to correct these errors? Last year you were good enough to reproduce a series of letters that had appeared anent the Langshan classes given at the Agricultural Show held at Worthing on August 12th. When it was proposed to have classes for the pure (Croad.) Langshans, the "Modern Game" classes to have classes also, and hence the letters that appeared. At a show recently held at Worthing these classes (namely) "the Modern Game" and the pure Langshan, were represented and the winners in the Modern Game last year entered birds in both classes and carried off the best prizes in both. I see by the papers that the master of the Mr. Henry Dyer, who reported on the Langshans at Worthing last year, judged the birds at this show. I leave your readers to form their own conclusions, and also to form their opinion of exhibitors who can thus "blow hot and cold in the same breath."

FEEDING FOWLS.

No complaint is more common among those who keep poultry than that of the great expense of food. Believing that by painstaking methods this may be greatly dinished, I am induced to recur to the subject, although it has been often treated of before. In a recent poultry visit, I found, on inspecting the yard, that the barley was fairly part of the footing on which I stool. It was trodden into the earth.

While I stood lamenting the waste, a well-disposed dairy and poultry maid arrived with another allowance in a tub. When I suggested that it should not be given, she exclaimed against the cruelty, and asked how the birds could lay if they were not fed. I accordingly showed her, and she went away, not convinced, but shaking her head, and muttering something about "bother."

Now, my plan is as follows:—Mix some meal and feed with small pellets, throwing two or three down at a time. When the fowls cease to run after them, leave off feeding. This should be done in the morning. In the evening give the birds a very little quantity of whole corn, and scatter it well about.

When fowls always have food by them they are badly fed; and if they will not run after it they do not want it. Fifty may be fed in this way in a very short space of time. More fowls are injured by overfeeding than by short commons. Another advantage in this system of feeding is that nothing but the fowls are fed—no sparrows or other interlopers.

In all houses there are scraps—pieces of bread or even crumbs from the table at every meal, cooked potatoes, bread used for toast and water, and all these things are valuable helps in feeding and reducing the meat bill. Hotel and restaurant keepers are always willing to dispose of such material at a nominal figure. These must not be considered extras, but should take the place of a meal.

Some may fancy that their fowls will be starved on such a dietary scale, but they are mistaken. Look at pheasants and partridges. They have to seek every grain: yet their plumage is always perfect, their condition excellent, and those who eat them can say how plump they are, and how juicy and full of flavor.

If poultry are to be kept at a profit, let them be moderately fed; and if some audacious cock should, like Oliver Twist, "pluck up a spirit and ask for more," let him either seek it or wait till the next meal.

Comparisons are possible in most thing. How long would children remain in health if they were allowed to have food constantly within reach? And suppose, when tired of bread and butter, bread and jam were given, then cake, and then every description of pastry, the poor child would lose its appetite, and then fall ill.

"Oh," says someone, "how ridiculous! Who would do this? Anyone would be a fool to act in such a manner." Softly, friends; you do it with your poultry. Too often your fowls have food always by them scattered on the ground, or, worse still, in a trough. The very sight sickens them.

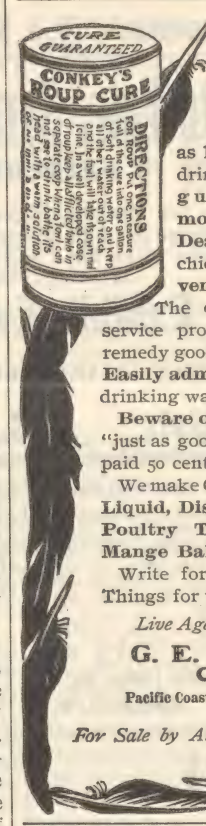
"I can't make the fowls out, ma'am; they have no appetite." "Chop a little suet and give it to them." This is the cake. "Their appetite don't improve, ma'am." "Give them some raw meat." This is the pastry.

"The fowls don't lay." They cannot; they are too fat, too feverish, too ill; they are dying for want in the midst of plenty. In their haunts will be found corn, hempseed, suet, and meat, all lying about in lumps; and the maid was right—they have no appetite. That has "been gone ever so long."

Let your fowls be hungry enough to run after you. When the cock finds a piece of food and calls, the hens should run to him, not, like some of the plethoric birds, merely raise their heads without leaving their lazy postures and snug corner. In nineteen instances out of twenty fowls cost at least double what they should.—An Old Fancier.—(Poultry, England).

CLASSIFICATION AT POULTRY SHOWS.

An ideal classification from the point of view of every fancier would be one in which every variety and sub-variety were extensively catered for. But we know that such classification is entirely out of the question at the average show, and even at the more important events we generally meet with people who declare that the classification is not what it should be. At the last Crystal Palace Show a fancier remarked that he should like to see four classes for every variety that enjoyed moderate popularity. This would indeed be good classification, but it would not be ideal, for we would still have the fanciers of the less popular varieties complaining of comparative lack of support. At any rate, ideal classification is out of the question at a show which has any ambition to pay its own way, and, failing an exhibition heavily subsidised by government, we are hardly likely to see such classification as everyone would like.



The question of classification is, however, an important one for all show committees, who have generally several objects in view. In the first place, they want to make their show pay; they desire to attract a representative entry of good birds; and, as each individual usually favors some particular breed, he naturally is more or less desirous of seeing that breed largely favored. The person or persons who draw up a schedule need to have considerable knowledge of the Fancy. We see in the case of some agricultural shows how ignorance of Fancy matters leads to an out-of-date schedule, for the classification of twenty years ago is still considered good enough for the present day, and while we find those good, but, unfortunately, unfashionable, unfashionable, breed, Dorkings, Brahmas, and Cochins, favored with from two to half a dozen classes each, many of the newer and very much alive varieties and sub-varieties are entirely ignored, not, one must believe, as an intentional affront to present-day fanciers, but simply through sheer ignorance of their very existence.

Let us suppose that a body of intelligent fanciers gathered together with a view to drawing up an attractive schedule, without bias in favor of any particular pet variety. Realizing that their business is to attract the rank and file of the Fancy, they would first of all select the most popular varieties. It is always a safe policy to put on two classes for buff Orpingtons, and in the generality of cases the black Orpington would receive second consideration. Then the barred Rock is a certain variety to trust with a couple of classes, and among the large family of Wyandottes it is always safe for even the smaller shows to put on two for gold or silver, and two for any other color, though an ambitious show would in most cases find it pay better to provide two each for golds, silvers, partridges, whites, and any other color, and in eight cases out of ten the average entry would be higher. Then there is a large family of Leghorns that has to be considered. Whites and browns generally justify separate classification, and at the present day the popularity of the black warrants the provision of two classes. The Minorca is invariably a safe draw, and among the other light varieties the only one show promoters would care to put faith in is the Campine, and even that is by no means a certainty just at present. Anconas have lost their hold, and Andalusians seldom return a good entry, while unfortunately the Hamburgh is not supported as show promoters would like.

Many people would say that no schedule could be complete without classes for Modern, Old English, and Indian Game; but do these breeds really give a satisfactory return to the people who provide classes for them? The modern Game, for instance, is not the little man's variety, and it is the little man's entries which count. People who go round the shows and see modern Game classes with three, four, to half a dozen entries, may well wonder whether the frequent provision of these classes is justified. Both the Old English Game and the Indian Game are, in the opinion of many, more deserving of separate classification, though it depends largely upon the class of fanciers residing in the district round about the show. One big fish will frighten away many little ones, and in the Old England and Indian Game Fancies the big men are fairly numerous in comparison with the little ones.

Langshans are seldom a safe variety to trust two classes to at an average country show, though occasionally they do come out of their shell. A year ago Faverolles would have been considered worthy of classification; but there have been so many empty classes of late that a show promoter had better beware of them. Other French breeds are out of the question, as are Dorkings, Brahmas, and Cochins, whose patrons, so prominent at the large shows, appear to ignore the desirability of making a good display at the small event. In bantams, Game, and several of the varieties, such as Rosecombs and Sebright, with a couple of classes for the others, should generally prove a safe investment, and a class of ducks is seldom a mistake.

There are no other breeds or sub-varieties that can be taken on upon their merits and popularity alone; but in a number of cases it is a comparatively easy matter for a secretary to get guarantees, and so add considerably to the attractiveness of his show. There are Orpington varieties, for instance, and the buff and white Rocks, with several healthy varieties of Wyandottes, which, suported as they are by clubs, can be included in any schedule in case of short entries. One or two Leghorn varieties also come under this head, and it would be a wise plan to secure guarantees for the Game breeds, while such an Andalusians, Anconas, Langshans, Hamburghs, French, and possibly one or two of the "ancient and honorables" might also be included in the schedule under the same arrangement.

There still remain the "variety" classes to be provided by the management, and it must be remembered that the more complete the classification the less likely are these to fill, for obvious reasons. Selling classes always pay well, and a show that provides a good assortment of these generally reaps a double profit, for not only do the surplus entries help to fill the exchequer, but the commission on sales is not to be ignored. Finally, some good shows do not consider it infra dig. to provide a gift class, which is to be viewed with mixed feelings. Briefly, it is more or less a gamble.

The most promising innovation is the breeding trio class, staged in large turkey pens, for a cock and two hens, limited to a certain value. These are interesting, invariably profitable, and are fast becoming popular.

Perhaps some show promoters who are arranging their schedules may find some suggestions and assistance in the above.—E.—Poultry, England.

SHOW AT CHARLESTON, S. C.

At a well-attended meeting of poultry fanciers and others, held last night at the Exchange Bank building, the Charleston Poultry and Pet Stock Association was organized, the particular purpose of the organization being to hold an annual exhibition and to generally advance interest in the raising of fine poultry and pet stock in Charleston. Thirty names are on the rolls, and it was understood that others will be added within the next few days. A further meeting for the adoption of a constitution and by-laws will be held very soon and a little later plans will be announced for the holding of the exhibition and bench show. The following officers were chosen at the meeting last night:

President, J. M. Connelley.
Vice-President, Dr. Benjamin McInnes.
Secretary, Dr. T. M. Sharlock.
Treasurer, W. K. McDowell.
Superintendent, J. B. Hyer.

Executive committee, J. J. McCarthy, J. T. Snelson, H. M. Collins, Dr. McInnes and Dr. Sharlock.

The members are enthusiastic over the idea of fiving the poultry show and say that it can be made a very interesting and important event. Within the past two or three years great interest has been developed in the raising of fine poultry in Charleston, and it is to be expected that the show will be entirely creditable.

H. J. QUILHOT SUCCEEDS CHARLES JEHL.

"Charles Jehl, of Elberon, New Jersey, has been compelled to give up the secretaryship of the National Bantam Association, owing to the serious condition of his health. He has been confined for many weeks with typhoid fever and a complete recovery depends on a total cessation from work.

Mr. Jehl has been identified with the Bantam interests for many years and has made an efficient and trustworthy officer of the association, and his many friends will regret the necessity of such a course, but hope that it may be the means of restoring his health.

The National Bantam Association is to be congratulated in choosing a most worthy successor in the person of Mr. H. J. Quilhot of Johnstown, N. Y., who assumes the duties of secretary at once.

Mr. Quilhot is too well known to need introduction to the Bantam breeders of this country and his personal popularity and long experience will enable him to take up the work and carry it on successfully.

The National Bantam Association has been in existence twelve years—starting with a membership of less than twenty-five—it now numbers over one hundred and fifty and is constantly increasing.

This association is comprised of all the most prominent breeders of Bantams in the U. S. and Canada and has been chiefly instrumental in bringing the Bantam into the popularity which it now enjoys."

Peirce and W. H. Card will place the ribbons. Further information will be cheerfully given by E. S. Freeman, Sec'y, Plainville, Conn.

GEYER'S SCURVY CURE FOR POULTRY was the first article introduced to the public for this purpose, which has been thoroughly tested in the last ten years by many of our brother fanciers who are willing to say with us that there is no other article on the market like this that can be relied on to do its work properly. It is something that the poultry fancier, who appreciates his fine birds, needs very much. What looks more disgraceful than a fine flock of chickens, many, or all of them, having their legs coated with a thick, hard, scabby crust which is called scurvy? It spoils the appearance of the birds and is very annoying to them. It is also contagious. Here we have a sure cure for this ugly disease. By following the directions we guarantee that it will take off that ugly, hard coat and leave the legs clean and smooth and give them their natural color. It also has no equal for healing sores and frosted combs and wattels. It makes them very bright and red. It is just what the exhibitor wants to prepare his birds for the exhibition room. Some of our customers tell us that they have tried it with good results for weak legs. We only ask you to give it a trial. It is put up in tin boxes. Money must accompany all orders. Price, 25 cents. Address, G. A. Geyer, Florin, Pa. 560tf

By Using Geyer's Champion Disinfectant & Vermin Destroyer

There are, in all classes of powders before the public, many calculated for the sure cure of lice and vermin and a dozen other purposes, yet are they reliable, and have they produced the results claimed?

In offering this compound, we offer a powder such as is not before the public, and fills a place that none other can for the purpose intended—a positive, sure disinfectant and destroyer of all vermin that invests either poultry, small animals, those of the barn yard.

It is a perfect destroyer of all disease germs, and produces a healthy odor wherever distributed. It is a sure cure for gapes, in young chicks.

If you are skeptical and don't believe in Powders or compouud because of many worthless ones on the market, we ask, please cast aside your prejudice and give this compound a trial. It is put up in 2 pound boxes. Price 25c. 560tf

A Study of Fowl Cholera

An Outlook in California---Results of Investigation by the College of Agriculture.

Archibald R. Ward, in Bulletin No. 156.

In October, 1903, a poultryman reported to the Agricultural Experiment Station that severe losses from "the cholera" were occurring upon his own and other ranches in Marin county. The presence of the disease was brought to his notice three weeks before by twelve dead hens being found under the roosts on one morning. On the second day as many more were found, after which deaths practically ceased for a week, when losses again occurred at the rate of from six to ten a day. In the three weeks from the start the disease had spread to four adjoining colonies, and about one hundred fowls had died during the time.

The request of the poultryman for advice was met by an extended visit at the ranch to study the nature of the disease and to suggest repressive measures. The symptoms of the sick fowls, the internal alterations resulting from the disease, and a bacteriological examination led to the conclusion that the true fowl cholera had been encountered. The serious foothold already gained among five colonies, comprising nine hundred fowls, necessitated prompt action to prevent its spread to the remaining two thousand fowls.

The poultry ranch in question was stocked with about three thousand fowls distributed over several hundred acres of land in colonies containing about one hundred and seventy-five fowls. Each colony was supplied with roosting houses, a laying house, a grain feeding hopper, feeding troughs, and drinking water fountain. The several colonies were near enough together so that those hens venturing farthest abroad during the day would intermingle with those from other colonies—a fact of significance in relation to the spread of the disease. The writer has observed hens to go several colonies from home, attracted by the feed in the wagon from which the daily rations were distributed.

An experiment was performed to determine the length of time elapsing between exposure to infection and death. Ten cockerels were selected from one of the colonies that was free from disease, and, as subsequent events proved, so remained. All were placed in a crate and were allowed to eat freely of the entrails and flesh of a fowl dead of the cholera. As each one died an examination of the internal organs was made, and conditions were found identical with cases that contracted the disease naturally. The experiment shows that the disease is very rapidly fatal, a large percentage dying within three days after exposure. The results demonstrate most emphatically the necessity for the immediate disposal of dead fowls to prevent the infection of other fowls by eating their carcasses.

Prevention must be the fundamental idea of all methods of dealing with an infectious disease like fowl cholera. In consequence, measures directed against it must be based upon a knowledge of the ways by which it is naturally spread from one individual to another. The fact that the blood at death teems with the bacteria of fowl cholera signifies that any part of the flesh or entrails is dangerous to other fowls when eaten. This fact was demonstrated in the experiment with the cockerels, all of which died within a week after eating entrails of dead fowls. The occurrence of extensive alterations in the walls of the intestine permits the mixture of blood with the contents of the intestine. Consequently the bacteria of the disease are present in the manure, thus rendering it a most serious factor in the spread of the disease. The probability of this material being mixed with the food by the feet is always to be considered.

Another way by which a sick fowl may spread disease is by means of the liquid that drips from the beak in some cases. As sick fowls are thirsty and frequently drink, there is opportunity of contaminating the drinking water. Since all sick fowls are a source of danger to others their immediate slaughter is imperatively necessary.

The infectious nature of the disease indicated the necessity for thorough and frequent spraying of poultry houses with some substance capable of destroying the bacteria of the disease and of minimizing the number of parasites that might spread the infection. A mixture of crude carbolic and crude sulphuric acids was used for some time, but later the sulphuric acid was replaced by phenolene. It was deemed best to spray all of the poultry houses on the ranch daily, without reference to the distribution of the disease.

H. O. Woodworth, foreman of the California Poultry Experiment Station, personally took charge of the application of the disinfectant, and the enforcement of other sanitary measures. I kept a record of the death rate, and from time to time changed the composition of the disinfectant.

The mixture finally adopted consisted of one-half gallon each of phenolene and crude carbolic acid to twenty gallons of water. This proved satisfactory, except that it injured the hose somewhat. The labor required to spray sixty houses each day consumed four hours' time for two men and a team.

The roosting houses were cleaned once a week, and the manure was placed in a part of the ranch where there would be no possibility for it to contribute to the spread of the disease.

When fowls are fed from open troughs, or when the feed is placed directly on the ground, there is a strong probability that the feed may become contaminated from the droppings of sick birds. The practice of feeding from open troughs was discontinued. Troughs were made so as to permit the fowls to reach the head in, but to prevent the feet from coming in contact with the feed.

On account of the danger to the fowls from the contaminated ground about the houses, the five infected colonies were moved on October 14 to another part of the ranch.

The practice of slaughtering all hens sick of the cholera was inaugurated promptly; but as the disease was noticeable for only a short time before death, many had opportunity to spread infection before detection. On October 17 it was decided to kill every hen that showed the slightest symptoms of any sort of disease. It was found very desirable to visit the roosting houses at daybreak, for at that time the sick ones are almost certain to be found lingering in the houses. The early visit also permitted the collection of the dead before the living could become For the purpose of restricting the possibility of fowls becoming infected from the droppings in the houses before the daily spraying, it was made the practice to drive out the hens early in the morning and to shut the doors until after the spraying.

The dead were burned or buried deeply, as convenient. Scrupulous care was exercised to dispose of the dead before the living fowls could molest them.

A number of fowls among those frequenting the vicinity of the house and barns were lost from the cholera. Two turkeys also died within a few hours after they were first noticed to be sick. These birds had abundant opportunity to catch the disease from sick and dead ones brought from the infected colonies. The few fowls about the house were caught and placed with one of the infected colonies.

On October 20 it was deemed necessary to place in the drinking water some substance known to be fatal to the fowl cholera bacteria and thus insure drinking water free from danger of communicating the disease. It was decided to use corrosive sublimate in the drinking water of the infected colonies, as suggested by Ritzer. That substance is a violent poison to most creatures, and there was some fear that it would have an undesirable effect upon the egg yield, if no worse would result. Stoneware drinking fountains were used, because the corrosive sublimate would have combined chemically with the metal drinking fountains in common use. For convenience in making up the solution of the desired strength, corrosive sublimate and ammonium chloride in the form of compressed antiseptic tablets were used. The tablets contain such an amount of corrosive sublimate that one tablet in a pint of water makes 1 to 1,000 solution, making the preparation of a solution of any weaker strength a simple matter.

Corrosive sublimate was used in the drinking water solely for the purpose of killing any of the bacteria of fowl cholera that might gain access to it, thereby eliminating one of the possible sources of infection. It was not used as a medicinal remedy.

The control of the drinking water of the fowls is a comparatively simple matter in the dry season. An outbreak in wet weather would present much more serious difficulties, for every puddle of water on the ground is more than liable to be contaminated from the droppings. Under such conditions fowls would catch the disease much more readily.

A study of the daily death rate in its relation to sanitary measures brings out the fact of the efficiency of merely destroying the sick fowls and then disinfecting thoroughly. These measures alone were enforced until the daily death rate dropped to 10.

It would be unsafe to draw conclusions concerning the actual benefit of the use of corrosive sublimate, for during its use extreme vigilance was exercised to weed out sick fowls. Moreover, its use was commenced about the time when the beneficial effects of disinfection might be expected to become evident.

Work on the ranch under the supervision of the experiment station was discontinued on November 5. After this date the disinfection herein described was not carried out. Each time the houses were cleaned the floors were sprinkled with lime. In December about twenty-five fowls were lost. Occasional deaths after this did not excite alarm until about April 1, when about fifty fowls were lost in a few days among the colonies originally infected six months before. This experience illustrates the danger of relaxing vigilance in dealing with fowl cholera. Any deaths from cholera must be considered alarming, for without repressive measures extensive losses are liable to occur at any time. A mere lowering of the death rate furnishes no grounds for a feeling of security.

SPREAD OF THE DISEASE.

The spread of the disease across the country has been the subject of some speculation. The evidence indicates that the movement of fowls is one of the important causes of the introduction of the cholera into flocks where it was hitherto unknown. The ranch upon which the station work was done appears to have become infected from an adjoining one where the disease existed, for the trouble first appeared in a colony nearest to the second ranch, and where fowls could readily intermingle. A third ranch, adjacent to both of these, had been stocked with fowls purchased in a locality several miles distant, where cholera was known to have been seriously prevalent.

The cholera and other infectious diseases may exist in a fowl in a sort of inactive, chronic condition, and there is no doubt concerning the agency of such a case in spreading the disease. Thus, fowls not suspected of being diseased may have the disease smouldering among them. The fact that occasionally a single fowl dies of cholera means that a severe loss may occur at any time.

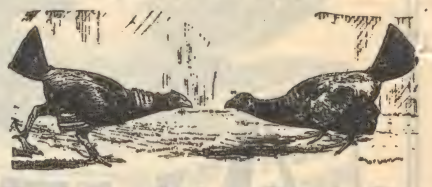
The possible importance of pigeons and wild birds as a means of spreading contagion is worthy of consideration. The fact that pigeons contract the disease and die has been demonstrated. Earlier writers have reported that many different kinds of birds are susceptible to fowl cholera. The practice of throwing dead fowls by the roadside is an important means of distributing the cholera. When the disease breaks out it is not uncommon for poultrymen to crate their fowls and take them to market. Not infrequently fowls die during the trip to the shipping point and are thrown out by the driver. Should this be done in front of a poultry ranch it is very liable to result in the further spread of the disease, for fowls eagerly eat the dead ones. The presence of fowls dead of the cholera along a roadside is a matter of common observation; two instances of the infection of poultry ranches from this source have been reported, and in both instances outbreaks involving serious losses have resulted. This practice is prohibited by legislation in Sonoma Counay, but it is practically impossible to secure evidence to convict the offenders.

An example of the relation of a stream of water to the spread of fowl cholera has come to notice. A poultryman whose fowls had been free from the disease noticed one evening that several dead fowls had drifted ashore from the creek running through his ranch. The next morning the carcasses were found stripped to the bone, partly eaten by skunks during the night, and later by chickens from a nearby colony. Fifty-eight fowls in the same colony were disposed of promptly, but not until one hundred had died. No further trouble was experienced. At least two ranches upstream were known to be infected with the disease, which suggests an explanation for the presence of dead fowls in the stream.

The spread of the cholera on a ranch is often greatly hastened by the poultryman, through failure to recognize the necessity for isolating affected fowls. An interesting case has come to notice. The fowls in a colony along the roadside became infected from dead fowls that had been thrown into the ditch. A number of dead fowls from that colony were brought to the house, where they were allowed to remain exosed long enough to start the disease among the two hundred fowls frequenting the vicinity of the house. With the hope of stopping the were placed in a colony by themselves. disease by moving these fowls, they were placed in a colony by themselves. The isolation from other fowls was not complete, and the infection spread. Disinfection was practiced intermittently and the dead were not gathered up promptly. Six months after the introduction of the disease, losses continued. The owner estimated that at least one thousand fowls died during the period mentioned.

The experience of another poultryman in the neighborhood furnishes information worthy of record. After having his stock of fowls depleted by the ravages of the disease, he determined to replace the losses by purchase of healthy fowls. As the disease existed in practically every colony at the time, the problem of introducing fresh stock was a serious one. The owner decided to make the attempt in a field containing three colonies in which 870 fowls had been lost out of 1,350 originally there. The survivors were removed to other colonies on the ranch. The houses of the three colonies were cleaned, whitewashed, and the floors sprayed with phenolene. Each of the three groups of houses was moved about two hundred yards from its former location and was left untenanted for two weeks. Nine hundred and fifty fowls were then distributed among the houses and no cholera appeared among them. That the field in question was quite isolated from other infected colonies is believed to be another factor that contributed to the happy result.

SYMPTOMS.



The yellow color of the droppings is the first noticeable symptom. The yellow material consists of the kidney excretion (urates), which is apt to soil the feathers covering the abdomen, a condition that should be looked for in suspected cases. Diarrhoea appears later. The character of the dung varies considerably in color and consistency. Sometimes it is a pasty, greenish mass, or a brownish red mucus, or a viscous, transparent fluid. The yellow color of the urates is the most noticeable feature.

The sick fowl gives evidence of its condition by an unnatural attitude of the feathers, and by a disinclination to move about as usual. None were observed to eat during the later stages of sickness. Thirst is frequently present, for fowls were observed to drink copiously in the advanced stages of the disease. A mucus discharge from the mouth was occasionally noticed. Toward the end drowsiness is very marked. The temperature in advanced stages of naturally infected cases varies from 109 degrees to 112 degrees, Fahrenheit.

Fowl cholera cannot be certainly recognized by the poultryman without the aid of bacteriological examination, but at the present time this fact is of no significance. The methods of combating the cholera are practically not different from those that should be applied in the other plagues of poultry closely resembling fowl cholera. The occurrence of numerous sudden deaths among fowls is indicative of an infectious disease, and should be the signal for the inauguration of sanitary measures.

TURKEYS.

By T. F. McGrew,

EGG LAYING, INCUBATION AND HATCHING.

The hen turkey will begin laying from the middle of March to the first of April. In the warmer localities they begin to lay even earlier than this.

Pairing.—A feature of vital importance is assurred fertility of the eggs. As soon as the hen turkey has paired with the male she pays but little attention to him for the time, being fully intent on locating a nesting place where she can lay her eggs. If perchance the pairing with the male has not been complete, her whole clutch of eggs will be infertile and her time and labor a total loss. The importance of vigor in the male is manifest at this most critical time. There is danger in having extra males that may disturb each other at the time of pairing. Therefore, never allow but one male turkey at a time to run with a group of breeding hens.

Gathering the eggs.—Much depends upon locality and climatic conditions. It often occurs that the hen turkey will begin to lay at a time when changeable weather may endanger the vitality of her eggs. She should be closely watched in her wanderings, so as to locate her nest and gather the eggs in order to protect them from the cold nights that may come at this early season of the year. It is better, when the necessity arises of taking all or part of the eggs from her nest, to leave eggs of some other kind in their place; large-sized nest eggs of china are the best. If all the eggs are removed she may become dissatisfied and wander away to locate her nest elsewhere, which may prove a disadvantage in securing the best results.

Hiding nests.—If unrestrained, the hen will naturally select some secluded or in the brush, for example, where place, under a pile of lumber or logs, she can hide her nest, hatch, and bring out her young after her natural inclination. If she selects a place which is not well protected, it is better to provide a box or coop with a suitable opening for ingress and egress to protect her and her eggs from the weather during the four weeks of incubation. In addition to this, the slat or lath frame may be placed over her a short time prior to the hatching of the eggs, so as to prevent the hen from wandering away with the young poults as soon as hatched. Those who favor the "perfect liberty plan" may secure larger flocks by following the above suggestions. Good care should also be given to the feeding of these semi-wild flocks while young and in unusually wet weather.

Prepared nests.—Those who care for turkey hens with a view to quieting and domesticating them may readily induce them to select for nesting places empty barrels that have been turned on their sides for this purpose. Make the nests within of soft straw or or hay, and the urkey hens will adopt these for their laying places if induced to come near them to feed. When they can not be made to select nests so provided, it may be necessary to confine them in a fair-sized inclosure until they are content to lay where it is more desirable. When the grower wishes to save all the eggs laid, provision must be made against the hiding of nests by shutting the hens into such inclosures. In this way they may be taught to lay in these nests, where they will sit when broody. From these inclosures they may be given freedom to roam about after 3 or 4 o'clock each day, or after they have laid. When roosting time comes, either coax or drive them back if they do not go voluntarily. By so doing one may have eggs to sell or set at will. Turkey hens will lay from 15 to 20 eggs before becoming broody, and it is not unusual to break them up from sitting the first time, have them lay again, and permit them to sit on their second clutch of eggs. When this is done the hen turkey should be fed plenty of grain, grit, and shell-forming material.

Hatching by hens.—Turkey hens produce such a limited number of eggs that it is scarcely necessary to bring into use the incubator for their hatching, as the hens themselves can hatch all they lay, or nearly all. Moreover, the fact that the turkey hens are almost indispensable to the successful rearing of the poults makes it an absolute necessity that they should hatch some of their eggs, so as to induce them to brood the poults. Quite frequently some turkey eggs for hatching are given to chicken hens of large size, and the poults they bring from the eggs are given to the turkey hen to rear. Chicken hens brood the poults quite as well as the turkey hens up to a certain age, at which time the poults begin to wander. If other broods of poults are with turkey hens, those with the chicken hen will usually leave their foster mother, wander away with a flock of turkeys, and stay with them.

Age of hens.—When there is an opportunity for choice, hens that are two years old or over are the best to select for hatching the eggs. The continual strain of four weeks sitting demanded for hatching turkey eggs is quite a trial of patience and endurance, and while many young hens do their part to perfection, it is safer to trust the task to older hens if you have them. Eggs from hens that are two years old and over produce stronger and more vigorous poults than do eggs from yearling hens.

Danger from insect parasites.—Whether the eggs are hatched by turkey hens or chicken hens, equal caution should be used to prevent the possibility of insect parasites of any kind being in or about the nest or upon the body of the hen. A dirt foundation covered with some slaked lime is a good beginning in the construction of a nest. Upon this should be placed a fresh nest of soft straw or hay. No other enemy is so destructive to young poults as lice, which are very apt to infest them as soon as they are hatched, if a determined fight is not made to prevent it. After the poults have begun to grow, they must be watched continually to guard against the presence of the lice.

Period of incubation.—It takes twenty-seven to twenty-nine days for turkey eggs to hatch. Those that are perfectly fresh will hatch a few hours sooner than those that have been kept a week or longer before placing them under the hens.

Number of eggs for a sitting.—The eggs are usually fertile; quite frequently each egg in the nest will produce a living poult. Place under each hen just as many eggs as she may properly cover—no more. Some may cover fifteen better than others will cover nine. If the hen is given too many eggs, a poor hatch is likely to result.

Two broods in a season.—When broody turkey hens are driven from their nests, they are quite likely to quit their eggs and select another location where they will nest and lay the second clutch of eggs. Some turkey hens will rear two broods in a season when permitted so to do. Late-hatched poults are not desirable for winter roasts, nor are they valuable for breeding stock, but they may be grown for broiler poults and sold to good advantage.

Feeding the sitting hen.—Wile incubating their eggs the hens should be supplied with food and water; these should be placed close at hand where they may go to them at will; or their coming from the nest, as they will each day, should be observed so that they may be fed and watered. Good sound wheat and corn are best for their food at this time.

FARMERS AS EXHIBITORS OF POULTRY AT THE WORLD'S FAIR POULTRY SHOW IN OCTOBER NEXT.

T. E. Orr, Superintendent of Poultry at St. Louis, is now on the grounds and will remain there until after the poultry show, which will be from October 24th to Nov. 5th. Concerning the interest that farmer fanciers are taking in this show, he writes us as follows:

Readers of the American Fancier will be glad to learn that the farmers who have become breeders of pure bred poultry are evidently deeply interested in this great show. We are receiving many calls from farmer fanciers for premium lists and entry blanks, and we confidently believe that when entries cose on September 10th, our records will show that many farmers from various states will have entered their favorites in competition; and unless our predictions are wrong, when the awards are placed the last week of October many of the big prizes will go to farmers.

In past years most farmers were backward about entering their poultry at large shows, but in more modern times, since it has become noised abroad that many of the leading fanciers have actually bought their winners from farmers, because the facilities of the latter for raising big, healthy chicks were superior to their own, many farmers have been entering their own best birds and winning many prizes. At a recent western show, a farmer was "almost persuaded" to enter a Plymouth Rock cockerel, but his nerve failed him at the last moment and he sold him to an exhibitor for five dollars. Within one week from that time that very bird won first prize at that show and sold for one hundred dollars.

The farmer is naturally a fancier, and he is generally ably seconded by his wife or daughters. If he keeps but one variety and keeps it well, if he retains his best specimens for breeders, there is no reason why he may not compete with the professional fancier.

The World's Fair offers special advantages to the farmer exhibitor. A committee of three well known fanciers has charge of receiving, cooping, feeding and returning the birds. No entrance fee is required, simply a fee of $1.00 for coop, feed and care. Enormous prizes, seven on each entry, are offered. The cash prizes range from $2 to $10 each, and there are many special prizes, some of them as high as $50 each in value.

Readers of this item who think of entering should write Col. Charles F. Mills, Chief of the Live Stock Department, at once for a premium list, stating what varieties they think of entering. Entries close September 10th. The Poultry Show opens the last week of October, positively the most pleasant time in the year to visit the World's Fair.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER, 3, 1904.

Mr. G. O. Brown, many years agricultural editor of the famous weekly edition of The Sun, Baltimore, Md., has handed in his resignation as a member of the editorial staff of the daily. The fact that in the future no weekly edition will be printed, has led Mr. Brown to take this step. The latter will cause wide-spread regret among the newspaper clan as G. O. Brown was a most interesting, able and thorough writer on agricultural and poultry topics. He will remove to his country place near Baltimore, "Oak Grove Poultry Yards," which he started over a year ago and start in as a breeder of Barred and White Plymouth Rocks, having built up strains composed of the best blood in America. We extend to the old judge and fancier our heartiest wishes for a successful career in his new undertaking.

Mr. Edgar Briggs, the well known White Wyandotte fancier and breeder, will assume charge of a fine poultry plant now being erected by Mrs. J. A. Bishop at Irvington-on-the-Hudson, September 19. It will be stocked with A1 White Wyandottes. Mr. Briggs has had remarkable success in the past in raising Wyandottes and Pekin ducks for market and exhibition and being a hard, conscientious worker, should place the new venture in the front rank from the start.

We learn from Postmaster William Holmes of Shelton, Conn., that his good old friend, Philander Williams, who had the misfortune to lose a foot through accident last winter, is able to be about as spry as ever. The old Light Brahma veteran is evidently blessed with an iron constitution, which, added to his fine, even temperament, enabled him to withstand a shock few men of his years could have done.

Supt. John L. Cost of the great Hagerstown show, informs us that a serious mistake has been made by the printer in "Rule 12" of the premium list. The word "not" should not have appeared. He further states that all intending exhibitors who have not received a list should send at once. The demand is great, but "John L." says they are ready to receive all comers and make the 1904 function the greatest ever known at Hagerstown.

The Empire State opened the fall show season in great fashion at Altamont, Cortland and Sandy Hill. Big strings of birds were at all three places and this week, Saratoga, Cambridge and Ballston follow suit and so on through several weeks to come. New York is looming up as the greatest circuit for fall shows in the United States.

F. B. Zimmer, who judged at Cortland, told us he had his hands full,the entries not only being very large, but the competition very keen. We found a rather lively bunch of birds at Sandy Hill, Dr. Phelps and "the only" Walter Sherry having very big teams and shown in fine condition.

Our associate editor, Mr. Howell, makes some timely comments on the prices of eggs and the quality that commands the top figures. Furthermore, he states a few plain truths regarding feeding for good eggs that should be heeded. They will be found in his department in this issue.

The prospectus of The College of Agriculture of Cornell University for 1904-1905 is at hand. A feature of the course is the poultry school under the guidance of Prof. Jas. C. Rice. The good work accomplished in this direction by the latter is well known and we advise all who desire to take a course in poultry to send for the above prospectus. Ithaca, New York, is the address.

Mr. C. A. Mack, East Greenville,Pa., one of the leaders in the Buff Plymouth Rock alley in America, is getting ready for an active fall and winter campaign. His success in the show room in the past, is well known to our readers, especially when he capped the climax by gathering in the coveted first prize for cock at the Madison Square Garden last winter. It will pay to have an eye on Mr. Mack in the future, as he has the goods to deliver, and we predict a very hot time in the Buff Rock circle later on.

Herr Wilhelm Russ, proprietor of the Excelsior Wire and Supply Co., Vesey St., New York, favors us with one of his latest literary productions. It's all about lice and lice killers and about as complete and important a list as we have yet seen. It should be in the hands of every progressive poultry raiser.

The names of the judges who are to officiate in the poultry and pigeon classes at the World's Fair, St.Louis, next October, will not be announced until September 10. This is after the entries close. A new way of putting the cart before the horse.

What the number of entries at St. Louis will be, is hard to foretell. That the west will be largely represented is a foregone conclusion. As to the East the outlook is wrapped up in mystery. The old line fanciers do not take kindly to the rules and regulations and seem to lack confidence in the whole shooting match. That is a bold truth and while it may be unpalatable to those who have tried hard to boom the St. Louis function, like Banquo's ghost, it will not down.

Men interested in horses, cattle, swine and sheep are not exactly fitted to dictate to the poultry raisers of America how they should conduct their shows. Real fanciers of fine fowls abominate the commercialism of the show business, and for good and sufficient reasons. A secretary of a poultry show that fails to recognize this class of exhibitors is the wrong man in the right place, and the day is close at hand when the officials of poultry shows must have hearts that beat as one with the hearts of the fanciers that always beat in unison. You cannot get away from that fact.

"There is too damned much funny business going on at most of our shows," remarked a pretty good fellow and exhibitor to us the other day. When pinned down to explain what he really meant, he said: "Oh, this borrowing birds and swapping around at fall shows in order to win the coin. There is too much of it going on!" Correct. Yet the above critic was doing exactly what he proclaimed to be "funny business." He was the star comedian.

ODE TO THE EGG.

Be gentle to the new laid egg,
For eggs are little things;
They cannot fly until they're hatched and have a pair of wings.
If once you break the tender shell,
The wrong you can't redress;
The "yelk" and white will all run out
And make a dreadful "mess!"

'Tis but a little while at best,
That hens have power to lay;
To-morrow eggs may addled be
That were quite fresh to-day.
Oh, let the touch be very light
That takes them from the keg;
There is no hand whose cunning skill
Can mend a broken egg!

FROM 20 INCUBATORS TO 20,000

That is the unbeaten record of the Prairie State Incubators: 20 sold first year—20,000 sold in 1903. Prominent duck and poultry breeders favor the Prairie State because it's always reliable and gives high per cent hatches. The United States Government uses them exclusively. Be sure to send for our free, illustrated catalog full of pictures—among them photos of incubator rooms where 20 to 80 of our machines are in active operation.

PRAIRIE STATE INCUBATOR CO., Lock Box 38, Homer City, Pa.

A GREAT SOUTHERN PLANT.

Charleston, S. C., Aug. 19.—Having a fancy to raise a few fine fowls for his own use and a little later deciding that it would do no harm to try his luck with an incubator, Mr. J. M. Connelley, who is recognized as one of Charleston's most energetic and enterprising citizens, became so much interested in the little down-covered chicks that came forth from his incubator on the first trial that he kept on filling the shelves and had built all the necessary "brooders" and running yards and poultry houses, and then turned his attention for a little while to raising a few homing pigeons. As matters advanced it became necessary to build and add and fix and plan, and little by little the few extra inches of ground on his place on Meeting street, that were not covered with the stables, the green houses and store rooms and what not, were put under wire and converted into quarters for the feathered pets that kept coming out of the white eggs and grew so fast that one could almost see the process of expansion. This went on for a time and Mr. Connelley became so much interested that he decided it was necessary to have larger quarters.

It was then that he made overtures to the owners of several pieces of property on Burns lane, and very soon the rickety old shanties that stood thereon were reduced to kindling wood. New buildings were put in that completely closed a court of nearly a quarter of an acres, and this was wired with heavy netting at a height of probably twenty-five feet. The entire ground floor was filled with thousands of bushels of clean, dry beach sand from Sullivan's Island, and the runways, the roosting places and the yards were given a little straw to afford the chickens something to scratch. The fowl houses are so constructed that the chickens can be fed and the eggs collected without the attendants entering the pens. Running water is available in every yard and the special quarters arranged for the ducks have large ponds, made with cement bottom and sides and supplied always with running water.

The second floor of the new houses are fitted up for the comfort of the pigeons, and from a couple of dozen of these birds, purchased a year or two ago, the stock has been increased to nearly two hundred.

The incubators (and during the season they will have five or six running constantly) are placed in the basement of the residence, and here may be seen any day hundreds of eggs, each numbered and ready for use or shipment. A place quite near, in the general garden, the brooders are provided and several hundred little orphans can be comfortably housed at a time and are here given their first chance of "hustling for themselves." Some of the runways are still in this section of the grounds, but the plans are that as soon as the chickens get a start and can leave the brooder they will be taken to the pens recently fitted up. Every convenience and aid to cleanliness is to be found here. Automatic feed boxes, which also have cups for the prepared foods and gravel and shell, are provided, and the thick carpet of hard, white sand is freshly put in at frequent intervals. Not only is the place wired in above, but in order to make the grounds "rat proof" the wire netting is placed under ground through the whole place, and thus the great pests of a poultry yard, rats and mice, are excluded.

In the chicken runs Mr. Connelley now has probably fifteen hundred splendid fowls. These range in ages from a few weeks to a year or more, the older fowls having been purchased from one of the most celebrated poultry farms in the country. At present the stock includes Barred Plymouth Rocks, Black Minorcas, Black Langshans, White Leghorns, Light Brahmas and Indian Games and Pekin Ducks. The arrangements of the poultry yards for the convenience of cleaning, gathering the eggs and feeding are unique and insure the very best results. It did not appear yesterday that there was a single droopy chick on the place.

The pigeons are also in splendid condition and their houses are conveniently arranged, and the attendant will be able to collect eggs or take out squabs at any time without going into the rooms.

Mr. Connelley is agent for manufacturers of incubators and of the special prepared foods, feeding appliances and various aids to the work. He buys in carload lots and last spring was not able to keep up with the orders received. As a result there are a great many citizens who are using, or intending to use, the incubators, and will try to supply themselves and their neighbors with eggs and broilers. Mr. Connelley's intention is to keep on bringing out the little yellow, fuzzy fellows and then grow them to perfection and sell them to people intending to raise fine stock.

When asked if he would be willing to show his new yards to visitors Mr. Connelley said yesterday that it would give him pleasure to show any visitor through his place. He has the finest poultry yards in the South, and he will be glad to have the Charleston people and the visitors to the city come and inspect the entire place. That it will surprise and please the majority is not doubted.—Courier.

COLDS, CATARRH, ROUP, ETC.—NATURE, CAUSE AND TREATMENT.

Oh, my chickens don't have colds! Sure of it? Guess you don't look very sharp, do you? Well, I never noticed it, any way, and I don't think they do. Yes, my friend, but chickens are about as liable to have colds as children are to have measles, or mumps, or chicken pox.

I have noticed that those which escaped the disease when young were very likely to have it in their second year. Whether all chickens have this disease or not, does not matter, as long as every poultryman in this (temperate) climate has it to encounter among his flocks. The causes of this disease are almost too numerous to mention. Some of them are draughts, crowding and foul air; close quarters favor it, and a long spell of damp weather (without special care of the fowls) will sometimes bring it on. But my experience has been, that even if I do the best I can, I will have some of it anyway. I have seen this dreaded foe to chickendom raging in fury at nearly all seasons of the year, but I think that generally it is more prevalent in late winter and early spring.

The disease affects fowls in various ways. I say "disease" for want of something better. I might say cold, catarrh or roup, but don't know which I mean. In fact, I think I mean any one of them, or all of them combined. The first symptoms are a discharge of mucus at nostrils, a swelled face about the eye, a frothy eye, or a rattling in the throat; also a sort of quick, short sneeze.

Some specimens exhibit but one of these symptoms, while some others seem to have two or three, or possibly all of them. I may add here that it has seemed to me that canker is of a different nature, especially when it is found in the wind-pipe and is accompanied by a very foul odor. Whether it is caused by a germ or not, I am unable to say. However, it is the most obstinate to treat and more often results in death, which is likely to be speedy. As to what name to give this disease, I have concluded that in a mild form it may be called a cold, when further advanced, say catarrh, and if the bird dies, why it died of the roup.

As long as a bird has a good appetite there is a good chance for recovery, but when this is lost, the trouble is so well seated that even though a cure is effected, the breeding value of the bird is greatly impaired. So, when a bird is unable to eat, bump its head hard against a post or rock, and bury it. It's the best way.

We don't like to come to this cruel way, so now will speak of the treatment. First, it is policy to remove all the sick fowls (as soon as they show the first symptoms) to dry, clean and comfortable quarters.

Put Conkey's (or any other similar kind of roup cure) in water, according to directions, or a little stronger. Be sure that there is no other drink or substitute obtainable, as the fowls will not drink the medicine if they can find half enough of any other moisture.

Feed enough, (but not too much) and provide shells and grit. With this treatment some of the patients should be cured at the end of one week, and most of them at the end of three weeks. When there is rattling in the throat, or swelling around the eyes, apply plain kerosene oil to the affected parts, internally or externally, twice a day, night and morning, but do not apply petroleum to nostrils, as it will stop the running and cause the mucus to clog, which is not the way to effect a cure, for it is only a matter of time when it will begin running again.

There are many kinds of roup cures advertised that are given in pill form. I have found these much more expensive and not any more effective than the above mentioned remedies. I have never known kerosene oil to fail to subdue the swelling in the face or to stop the rattle in the throat (not caused by canker.) In my experience I can recall of but one bird that was cured of canker in the windpipe and many that fell a victim. After all that is said about cures, the best way is to prevent. I think it safe to say that about one-half the diseases of fowls are caused by vermin. Therefore, be sure, be positive; I say, know for a certainty that your chickens are not lousy, and with other favorable conditions your hospital will be nearly vacant.

THEO. F. JAGER, Sec'y.

Springdale, Conn., Aug. 16, 1904.

The Tenth Annual Show of the Western Poultry Fanciers' Association will be known as its Jubilee Show, for which preparations have now begun to make it the greatest show in its history. The prizes will be very liberal, in cash, valuable cups, trophies, sweepstakes that should draw an exhibit of the best from the adjoining states. The judges selected are D. J. Lambert, R. W. Wales and U. J. Shanklin, all noted for the value of their score card. The dates are January 16-21.

Mr. Howell, associate editor of The American Fancier, will furnish weekly reports on the egg and poultry market, and answer all questions submitted to him relating to commercial and practical poultry keeping. When replies are requested to be sent by letter, stamps must be enclosed and letters addressed to George E. Howell, 70 Christopher St., New York City.

Eggs.—Receipts for week, 61,565 cases. There is an ever increasing demand for real fresh goods, so great has the pressure been applied to this grade. Country prices have been affected, although the current prices do not show it.

To the thinking man the lesson is easily read, a general hustle up all along the line. If they show the heat from lying on the nests all day, gather them twice or three times a day. If the trouble lies in handling, make the trip to market twice as frequent. There ought to be a higher percentage of fancy stock coming to this market and it will be the case if the producer will get a faster move on.

We quote fancy new laid, white, 25 to 26c.; fair to good, 22 to 24c.; mixed colors, best, 23 to 24c.; best western, 20c.; 2d grade, 19 to 20 c.; southern, 14 to 18c. per dozen.

Poultry—Receipts, 19 cars live and 6,000 packages dressed. Live fowls, 13c.; chickens, nearby and western, 14c.; southern, 13c. per lb. Western Ducks, 70 to 80c. per pair. Pigeons, 20 to 25c. per pair.

Dressed broilers, Phila., large, 21 to 22c.; small, 18 to 19c.; Pennsylvania and Eastern, large, 15 to 17c.; small, 13 to 14c.; western dry picked, 14½ to 15½; scalded, 14c.; southern, 13 to 14c.

Fowls, 13½c.; turkeys, old, 13 to 15 cts.; spring, dry picked, hens, 30 to 35c.; Toms, 25 to 30c.; spring ducks, 15 to 15½.; squabs, white, $2.50; mixed, $2; dark, $1.50 per dozen.

A wave of high priced food products now encompasses this country. The output of the chicken man is enjoying fully as high an elevation as either the dairy, the granary or Mother Earth herself. For example, here in August there is a general cry for fresh eggs at prices one expects to realize in November.

Generally, at this season, the market price of fowls ranges from 8 to 10 cents per pound; to-day it is 13 cents. That new delicacy, turkey broilers, or, more commonly speaking, spring turkeys, is coming forward with support to the ever decreasing game dishes on the bill of fare, at the modest price of 35 cents per pound.

While these prices last, the poultryman can look with complacency upon dollar wheat, as he has the best end of the deal. Another thing, the outlook is for a prodigious crop of corn; looks like 40 cents a bushel or under for the new crop, and when you come to think about it, corn is the natural food for a chicken, as much as oats are synonymous with horse-feeding.

A great peculiarity of the different kinds of grain, as identified with fowl-feeding, is that under different methods of treatment, a place for each can be found on the program.

Whole corn of the large kernel varieties isn't fit food for the smaller breeds, but when cracked it is adapted to all and its feeding value has been enhanced one hundred per cent. Oats of the ordinary thirty pound to the bushel kind will, if fed lavishly produce a perfect example of crop-bound, yet these same oats, if allowed to soak in water for a half day, will show no ill effect.

Whole wheat does not produce a rich colored yolk, hence ranks behind corn as a poultry food, but wheat bran and wheat middlings have always been a staple component of the morning mash, and cannot be improved upon to the extent of about two-thirds of the ration, the other one-third of oily and fattening substances, seem to disseminate with the wheaten products as with no other food.

Wheat, millet, rye, barley and oats are what might be termed short-rationed foods, and when fed in litter are valuable as an incentive to activity.

Reports from the west lead one to believe that alfalfa will supercede clover as a forage for fowls when confined, and when winter prevents the fowls from gleaning their own green rations.

It has been demonstrated at Syracuse, this state, that it can be grown in the east, once the agriculturist learns how.

Consistency is a great thing, the funny part of it is, it only applies to the other fellow. I have just been reading a long dissertation on the subect of farmers showing at the county fairs. This writer says: "The State (meaning New York) appropriates much money to the different county fairs, to foster local improvement in farm animals and produce."

In the poultry department he advises the intended exhibitor "to buy a good pen on the outside to insure winning."

The state, as he says, appropriates money to encourage the farmer to produce and exhibit at his local fair, his best, that he may compete for this state money as prizes. He is expected to raise, not buy, what he exhibits.

As this money is allotted to each locality, it undoubtedly is right to restrict the competition to the locality benefitted, but to be consistent, don't build a high wall around your fair grounds to keep out competition, and then turn round and advise buying birds on the outside to compete against the locally raised ones.

Put it down in black and white, either take down the wall or lock the gate.

TABASCO SAUCE.

Seems to be the fashion nowadays for one lobster to apologize for another.

Say, Drev, remember Roosevelt's motto, "Speak softly, but carry a big stick."

Have you made your entry for St. Louey, Mr. So and So as breeder? Gee, but ain't it a sunflower!

Say, Drev., whenever you quote from another, please give credit. Don't be a lobster.

It looks like the deuce to be hauled up and then try to crawl out by making a lame excuse.

"Don't fall asleep at the switch."

Patrick Henry Jacobs is looming up again. Got his second breath, or second childhood, which?

Pat was always one of those lobsters that made lots of fun and to the point.

Patrick has been engaged to judge mongrels at the World's Fair according to that standard that Roundabout Robby is going to get up.

Did you notice that article in that paper published at Bosting about the standard and judging?

Whoever wrote it must have spent hours of labor and thought.

Where does the A. P. A. get their standard from? Why, the breeders, of course.

Who constitutes the A. P. A.? Why, the breeders, of course.

Why do the breeders who work up a new breed knock and knock at the door of the A. P. A. to have their standard admitted?

Why don't they ask Farm-Poultry to have the breed taken in?

All these things show which way the winds blow.

And when Mr. Robinson, or any one else, says that the standard is not the measure by which poultry is judged, I say they are ignorant of the laws that govern poultry shows, or else they are so constituted that they won't admit it.

Say, Drev, if you would only let me blow off as I would like to, I would make some of those lobsters think that the 16-inch gun at Sandy Hook was fired off under their editorial perch.

I will give you fair warning: Watch these squibs, else I'll slide in a corker on someone.

Theo. Hewes wants the pair of Orrs to get up something to wear at St. Louey, so the hundred chicken cranks can be found.

Would suggest that it be in the shape and look like a box of sardines, and printed thereon, "Member A. P. A. Defunct, Demoralized and Deficient."

And around the sides have these words inscribed: "Jay Aitch Robbessun. The Moses of fancy poultry; follow him."

On the under side have a photo of General Grant Curtis, with an olive branch in his hand.

Have you received a blank to fill out to judge at St. Louey?

I'll bet 30 cents against Mr. Bean's opinion of the A. P. A. that some of our best judges will not fill out that blank.

Who's going to furnish those cages? Would like to know before I put my X down with Mr. Gaybird as breeder.

Tom Orr, they tell me, is at St. Louey.

I wonder if he will have time to write any more books.

Say, Tom, will you get mad if I roast you on some of your writings or books.

"Judging Poultry," by T. E. Orr, in Poultry Success, is a corker. Will put in some squibs later.

Wonderful what a lot of stuff such a duck can put on paper.

Suppose Lieut. Orr will get a job to judge St. Louey now after that article about Beaver Hill farm.

THE PUREBRED BUSINESS HEN.

F. Q. White, who has met with much success as a breeder, gives the following good advice:

One of the questions continually asked by those thinking about trying to make poultry profitable is: "Would I not be just as successful with common fowls as with purebred or fancy stock?" If not, why? There are several reasons why it pays to keep purebred hens. First, your flock is uniform, and you can give the feed and care that your variety needs. With common mixed flocks you are feeding some hens fat, while others may not get what they need. Your chickens are much evener if all one kind, and if you are selling for broilers to a fancy trade, you would see a difference between a crate of nice pure-bred Wyandottes or Plymouth Rocks and a crate of red, white, blue and speckled scrubs. It might easily make a difference of two or three cents a pound. Now pick up the market quotations and note the prices on "fancy selected white" and the next grade, which means plain "fresh eggs." There you find a difference again of two or three cents a dozen. Does it cost any more to raise these fancy broilers or fancy eggs? Not a cent more after you get started. Of course it costs more to get a start in any purebred stock than in mongrels. Careful breeders have been at work for years developing these different breeds, each for a specific purpose, and it stands to reason that they will fulfill that purpose better than those with only hit or miss or no breeding.

We sometimes hear of some woman who is making money from common hens, but this only proves she understands her business and would make more if she had a good strain of purebreds. It is a well-known fact that eggs of different breeds do not hatch alike, and some are much more difficult to hatch than others. One should take all these things into consideration and study their markets and their own likings, for anyone will make a much greater success with a breed he likes. After you have made your selection do not buy a male and try to grade up scrubs, and do not pay $25 for a show trio of fancy birds. First, get either a few settings or a hundred or more eggs of the breed you want from some breeder you can rely on to treat you fairly; then study your strain; find out its weak points, and buy males to correct those faults. This is when you want to buy a Standard and find what that breed should look like to win prizes. You will soon be proud of your flock, and you will want to show all your friends your birds. If your hens are inclined to be too short-backed you should buy a male with the opposite tendency. If they are weak in any point get a male strong in that point to breed them to. But do not sacrifice vigor and health to fancy or fads; leave that to the showman. Don't try to keep more than one breed; you won't know all there is to know about that in 20 years. It is more profitable to be known as a good breeder of White Leghorns, Wyandottes or Plymouth Rocks than it is to be able to advertise one hundred different varieties of poultry for sale.

There is plenty of money in poultry if managed in a business-like manner. A dairyman would not keep Holstein cows for a fancy butter trade, nor would he expect to get rich from selling Jersey milk, although there are good butter cows and good milkers in both breeds. So a poultryman should keep the breed that is adapted to his business; the heavy breeds for market poultry and the lighter, more active breeds for eggs. You will have hens in any breed that do not pay their board, and these must be weeded out and got rid of by the "ax process." It is a nice business to pick them out, and many a fine hen has been sacrificed because she was in such a ragged and generally dilapidated condition, due to her persistent laying. One trouble with scrubs is the lack of a type and the extreme difficulty of culling out the unprofitable birds. We have all seen where good breeds that have been bred for years true to type were crossed. The result was a reversion and any old thing. Get purebred stock; keep it pure; strive to improve your strain constantly, and you will have a greater pride in your flock and give them better care, which after all is the secret of success in the poultry business. Whoever heard of a poultryman with some fine purebred hens allowing them to roost on the rail fence or over the pigpen? Take care of the hens and they will take care of you.—Rural New Yorker.

THE VARIEGATED SPECIES.

I do not like the term "variegated" as applied to fowls. It smacks more of floriculture than aviculture. And yet for the purpose in view I know of no better term. Parti-colored would have been exact, but for present purposes too wide, because it would include all mottled ,spangled, barred,laced and penciled fowls, and my purpose is to briefly consider the parti-colored fowls which do not possess such exact markings.

If shadings and luster were considered, all varieties of fowls would be parti-colored. There is, strictly speaking, no such thing as a solid-colored fowl. White fowls have more or less plumage; black fowls are black and purple, or black and green; buff fowls are buff and red, and frequently buff and black, or buff and white; and so-called blue fowls are both laced and blue and black, or blue and purple. And yet we consider white, black,buff and blue as solid-colored fowls, and exclude them from the class of variegated fowls.

By variegated fowls as here used we mean all the fowls which have two or more colors and which are not included under the terms of solid or self-colored, mottled, spangled, barred, laced and penciled fowls. This class brings together a somewhat miscellaneous array and includes the Light Brahmas,the Colored and Silver-Gray Dorkings, the Black-Breasted Red, Golden and Silver Duckwing and Red Pyle Games, the Brown and Duckwing Leghorns, the Black-Breasted Red Malay, the White-Crested Black Polish, and a number of varieties of Bantams, including the Light Brahma, the Black-Tailed Japanese,and the several corresponding varieties of the Games.

In many of these varieties the males and females are differently colored. This is true of all the fowls except the Light Brahma and the White-Crested Black Polish, and of all the Bantams except the Brahma and Japanese, which two have very similar markings. In these varieties differing in the color of the sexes, all the males have black breasts, tails and under parts except the Red Pyle Games, and the upper parts are red or silvery white, with more or less black markings. The Red Pyle Game is colored exactly like the Black-Breasted Red, except the black has been displaced by whit. In its original production it was due to a cross of the Black-Breasted Red and the White Game, and in this crossing the black disappeared, proving that while red is a very permanent color, black is a very evanescent color in the domestic fowl.

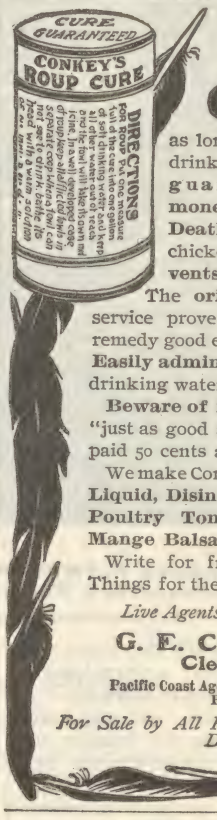
The females of the varieties in which the males belong to the black-red type are of a brownish color, varying somewhat in shade and marking, a color which, when the fowl is upon the ground or among dead leaves, is very inconspicuous. It is probable that, as the wild original of the domestic fowl is of this type of coloration, the coloration of the hens was protective against enemies when engaged in the duty of incubating their eggs. The females of the varieties where in the males the red has given place to a silvery white, are either of some shade of brown or gray, which is also less noticeable than the striking colors of the male and would serve as a protection to the female in the wild state.

The Light Brahma, Light Brahma Bantam and Black-Tailed Japanese Bantam are largely white fowls with black tails, and the first two with well-defined black stripes in the hackle, the Japanese Bantam also showing this striping sometimes. Indeed, a Japanese fancier wrote me that in Japan they bred the birds with this Light Brahma marking.

The intimate relationship between the Light Brahma coloration and barring, such as the Plymouth Rock possesses, was disclosed to me by a cross which I made between Barred and White Plymouth Rocks. From this cross I produced several birds—two at least I recall—which had almost perfect Light Brahma marking. And when the Columbian Wyandotte appeared with its Light Brahma marking, I suggested that it was produced by crossing the Barred Plymouth Rock and the White Wyandotte, a suggestion which afterward the originator, Rev. B. M. Briggs, told me was the method employed.

In this class of variegated fowls we have the largest variety, the Light Brahma, the tallest variety, the Black-Breasted Red Malay, the most elegant of exhibition breeds,the modern Game, some of the most noted table fowls,the two varieties of Dorkings, and the shortest-legged Bantam, the Japanese. Here too we find table fowls, general-purpose fowls, great laying fowls and fowls peculiarly regarded as ornamental. To this last class I refer of course the several varieties of Games and the Polish. The largest price ever paid for a fowl was paid a few years ago for a Black-Breasted Red Game cock, about $1,000 in our money. The Brown Leghorn is one of the greatest layers in the world, if not the very greatest. The Malay is notable because of the immense length of its leg and neck, of its overhanging eyebrows, giving it a cruel expression not entirely belied by its disposition, of its extremely scanty but loud and brilliant plumage, of its peculiar walnut-shaped comb, and of the suspicion that to it is due some of the exhibition excellencies of the modern Game and that possibly from it have descended some strains of the Indian Game. It is a superb table fowl despite its great length of leg ,and disputes with the Aseel the bad eminence of being the worst layer among domestic fowls. It was once a favorite for crossing to secure size, but in our day better fowls are available for this purpose. It has few breeders, but it is nevertheless a very interesting fowl.

By many the Duckwing coloration (so named because of the beautiful bar across the cock's wing) is considered the most beautiful that domestic fowls possess. It certainly is beautiful, and the steel-gray hens are almost, in their quieter garb,as beautiful as the males. While not included among penciled varieties, they are frequently quite regularly and accurately penciled. The penciling, however, is usually much narrower than that upon the fowls regarded as penciled fowls, and the lines sometimes are little more than a succession of small dots of color.



We may say of this class that the Light Brahma is the most popular of the Asiatic varieties; that the Black-Breasted Red Game is the most popular Game fowl; that the Brown Leghorn is a popular variety of the Leghorn family; that the White-Crested Black Polish is the most popular Polish fowl; and that among the Bantams none are more popular than the Black-Breasted Red Game, unless the Silver Sebright is an exception, and I do not think it is. Variegated fowls, therefore, include a number of the most popular varieties, and as a class must be considered popular.

Nearly every one of these varieties requires considerable skill to breed to perfection, and that is naturally to be expected of fowls where the male and female are of different coloration. In such fowls, however, the chickens in their first feathers are colored and marked alike and have the female coloration—this too being probably protective to the young in the wild state. This serves a useful purpose in selecting pullet-breeding males, for the young cockerels which have the most perfect female coloring should be selected for pullet breeding. This is a fact that a breeder will do well to bear in mind and will find very serviceable in practice. It will help him out greatly in making his matings. The ease by which chickens can be marked by punching a hole in the web of the foot makes the keeping track of these cockerels a very simple matter. And if he does this, he will find that the reading of this article has not been a waste of time. Every writer desires, probably, to render a service to the reader, but he is not always sure of so doing. In this case, however, I do not hesitate to assert that the facts mentioned is one of the most useful rules in selecting cockerels to breed finely-colored and marked pullets that has yet been discovered.—H. S. Babcock in The Rural New Yorker.

NUTRITIVE VALUES.

While the residents of cities cannot avoid paying high prices for beef when labor troubles ensue, the farmer daily has fresh eggs ready for his use. Eggs are free from borax, sulphite of soda, or other agents used for preserving meats, and are also highly nutritious. An egg weighing one and three-fourths ounces contains about one hundred and twenty grains of carbon and seventeen and three-fourths grains of nitrogen, or about fifteen per cent. of carbon and two per cent. of nitrogen. The value of one pound of egg as a food for sustaining the active forces of the body is worthy of consideration. As a flesh-producer one pound of eggs is claimed to be equal to one pound of beef, but something depends upon the objects desired in the use of foods. An egg is very digestible if consumed raw, and is not as quickly perishable as some kinds of animal food, hence it is one of the safest and purest foods that is within the reach of the consumer.—Farm and Fireside.

It is now being printed in colors and edited by an experienced staff of writers. We note that F. M. Simmonds, Jr., is assisting in the general management. KILLING MARKET CHICKENS.

The method of killing chickens by dislocating its neck is different from the old fashioned way of wringing or twisting the neck. When the chicken's neck is dislocated, and the head is pulled from the neck, the loose, unbroken skin of the neck forms a sack into which the blood of the chicken flows. The body of the chicken is as well drained of blood as if the head were cut off with an axe.

The market appearance of the chicken is improved by the killing by dislocation, and the flesh of the chicken is more juicy and edible. On the contrary, when the chickens are killed by twisting the neck death results mainly from strangulation. The body of the chickens is not freed from blood on account of there being no space in the neck into which the blood can flow. The appearance of the flesh of the chicken that has been killed by twisting its neck is reddish, and blood can be plainly noted in it.—W. A. Clemons, Canadian Department of Agriculture.

GEYER'S SCURVY CURE FOR POULTRY was the first article introduced to the public for this purpose, which has been thoroughly tested in the last ten years by many of our brother fanciers who are willing to say with us that there is no other article on the market like this that can be relied on to do its work properly. It is something that the poultry fancier, who appreciates his fine birds, needs very much. What looks more disgraceful than a fine flock of chickens, many, or all of them, having their legs coated with a thick, hard, scabby crust which is called scurvy? It spoils the appearance of the birds and is very annoying to them. It is also contagious. Here we have a sure cure for this ugly disease. By following the directions we guarantee that it will take off that ugly, hard coat and leave the legs clean and smooth and give them their natural color. It also has no equal for healing sores and frosted combs and wattels. It makes them very bright and red. It is just what the exhibitor wants to prepare his birds for the exhibition room. Some of our customers tell us that they have tried it with good results for weak legs. We only ask you to give it a trial. It is put up in tin boxes. Money must accompany all orders. Price, 25 cents. Address, G. A. Geyer, Florin, Pa. 560tf

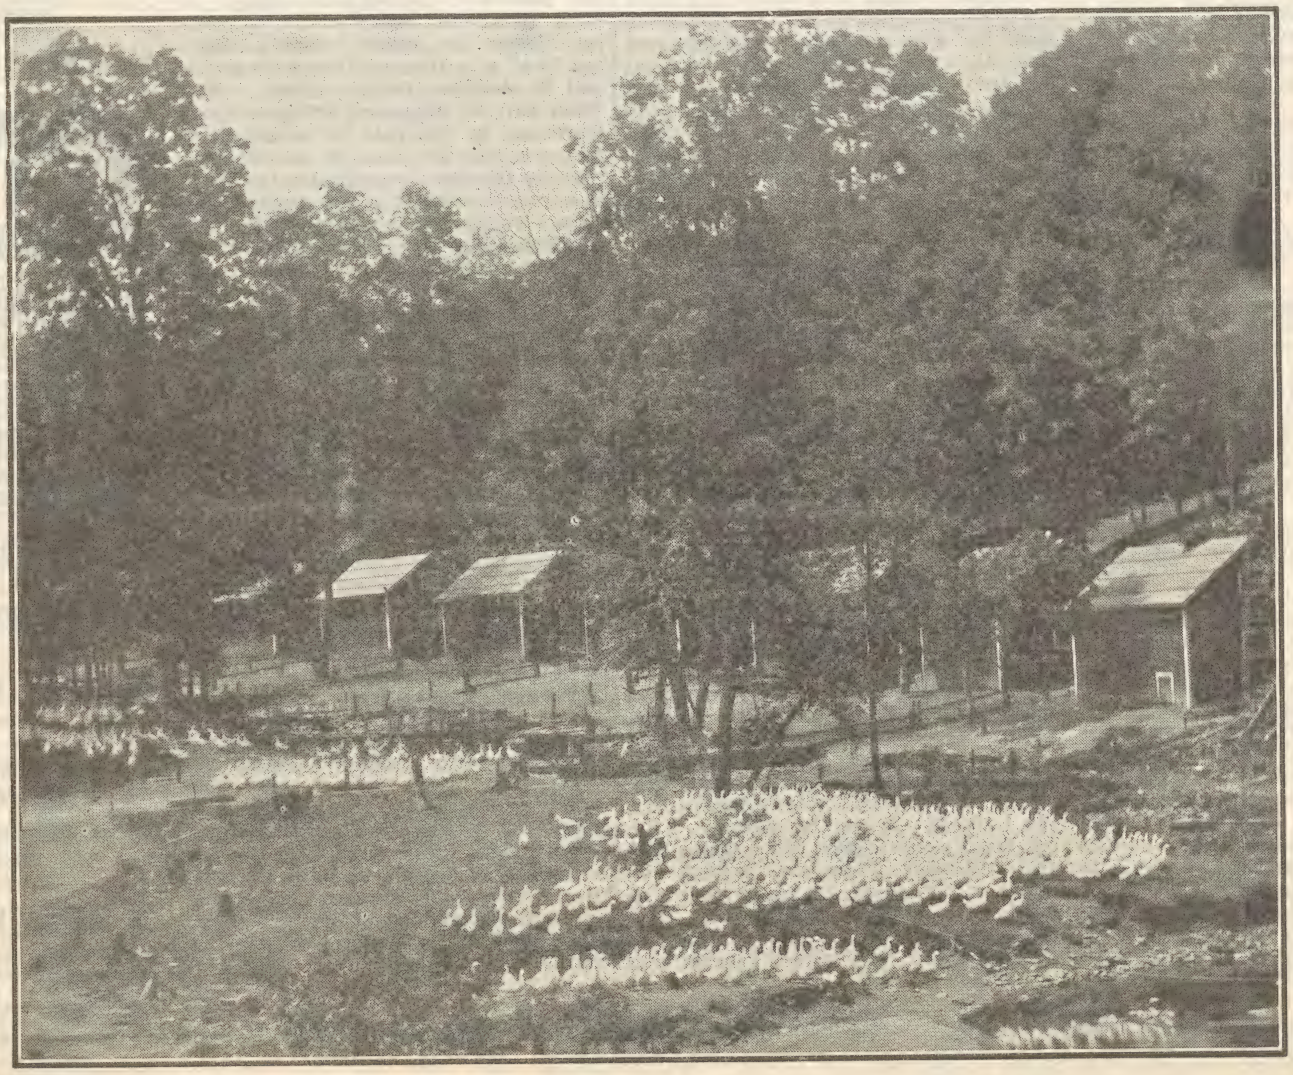
Raising Ducks by Thousands

Scenes on a Great Poultry Ranch in the Hills of West Pennsylvania.

Did you ever stop to think how many ways there are in which the growth of the country, and the flocking together of people in large communities, have brought new industries into being? The pictures on this and the following pages will help one to realize this.

A poultry raiser gave these to an Express reporter the other day as the plain, everyday facts on which his business was based:



"Artificial poultry rearing pays.

"Artificial poultry raising is an industry that has quadrupled in proportions during the last twenty years.

"The poultry and egg product now ranks above the wheat, corn, or cotton crop in point of value."

The epicure who demands a fresh egg for breakfast in the dead of winter, or a cut from a prime roasting chicken in the late spring or early summer, wonders why they are so hard to obtain, and why such high prices rule. To-day a shortage exists for more than half the year and prime roasting chickens command exorbitant prices during certain seasons, fresh eggs being literally scarcer than hen's teeth during the severe winter months. Yet the total value of the poultry and egg crop is greater than that of the wheat, corn, or cotton crop.

Formerly the small farmer's flocks, situated within shipping distance of the cities, supplied the market in season, and left it bare out of season. To-day the great packing houses scour the country for poultry and eggs, shipping carload after carload from Texas and the Central Southern States to the Northern, Pacific Coast, and Eastern cities; and the thousands of tons of frozen poultry, and millions of dozen of eggs are taken from the great freezers where they have been stored in time of plenty, and put upon the market at good prices at the time the supply of fresh stock is limited. But this supply, gathered from the innumerable small flocks of the farmers, no longer satisfies the demand. An industry has grown up in artificial poultry raising. Not only have there appeared large numbers of small producers, who make a specialty of eggs, broilers or roasters, but there has also developed the large poultry ranch,conducted by men who have gone into the business the same as they would enter any mercantile pursuit. To-day the ranch with its 20,000, 30,000 or 40,000 birds is no longer a novelty, and though such ranches are not quite as plentiful as the great sheep and cattle ranges of the West they bid fair to become so.

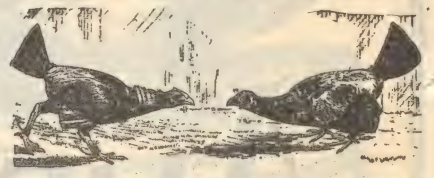
Artificial hatching and rearing of poultry is not new. It was carried on in ancient times by the Egyptians,who built large mamals or hatching ovens. The Chinese have for ages hatched chickens artificially in houses heated by charcoal fires. Yet, as is the case with so many other things of manufacture and commerce, it remained for the Americans to devise a hatching apparatus that was simple and automatic in operation, and capture the major portion of the world's trade in this line of agricultural implements.

But what is the basis of this artificial rearing of poultry? It is the incubator—the artificial mother that makes it possible to get chickens enough to supply the demand, and to furnish them when they are most needed.

To learn something about incubators the reporter called on Charles A. Cyphers of Buffalo, whose name is well known wherever artificial incubation is known. Mr. Cyphers' book on the subject of artificial incubation, Incubation and Its Natural Laws, was written after many years of research and experiment, ,and is the only standard work on the subject, being used as the textbook on the science in agricultural colleges, not only in this country, but in England and the British colonies. His name is familiar to our readers through the recent attempt of the company which he organized to prevent his using his own name in the incubator business. When asked about the case Mr. Cyphers replied: "Judge Lambert's decision sustaining me in the use of my individual name in my own business is all that I can wish for. My name is known individually as well as the Cyphers Incubator." Mr. Cyphers talked very entertainingly of the business in the development of which he had been so important a factor. The first Cyphers incubator was placed on the market in 1896. Before that time there had been many hatchers introduced, but none which could be relied upon for the results given by this machine. Later the business was incorporated under the name Cyphers Incubator Company, and of this company Mr. Cyphers was president and general manager until his withdrawal last October. During that time a very large trade was worked up, and in the season previous to Mr. Cyphers' withdrawal a business of about $468,000 was done. These figures are the best possible indication of the marvellous growth of this practically new business.

Upon withdrawing from the old company Mr. Cyphers immediately began preparing to place a new machine on the market, The Model Incubator, designed on impoved lines. Just how well he was known, and what weight was carried by his declaration to the public that the new machine was an improvement over the old,is shown by the fact that within 60 days from the time he issued a circular announcement of his new business, he had 126 men at work in his factory at Nos. 39-47 Henry street, and has not only since shipped machines into every state in the Union, but into Canada, Mexico, England and the continents of Europe, Africa, South America Australia and New Zealand. Like other manufactures the business brings money to Buffalo from distant parts, and largely leaves it here.

Mr. Cyphers then went on to tell of the business generally. Hatching machines, commonly called incubators, are built of various capacities, holding from a few dozen eggs up to several hundred. They are heated by common oil lamps, in which point all makes are similar. From this they differentiate into two classes, the machines heated by a hot-air system, and the others heated by a hot-water system. The hot-water system is the older of the modern systems, but has been almost wholly supplanted by the more pliable hot-air system. There are many makes on the market, and their chief points of superiority lie in the accuracy of the regulation of temperature, and the perfect ventilation, with a retention of a proper humidity in the hatching chamber. An even temperature of 103 degrees is necessary to hatch all birds' eggs. For the most successful hatching the temperature, ventilation and humidity must be controlled automatically.



After the chicks are hatched, they are placed in nursery brooders, in other countries called artificial mothers. Here the newly hatched chicks are kept at a temperature between 80 and 90 degrees for the first week. Then this is tempered off to a lower warmth. In the cold of winter the young chicks are kept in heated quarters for the first two months,but ducklings are hardened much earlier and do not require so much warmth. The small breeder usually uses portable brooders, heated by oil lamps and holding from 50 to 70 chicks. The large breeder or rancher constructs long houses for the work and heats them by hot water or steam system and coal heaters. These brooders sometimes have a capacity of 10,000 chicks or ducklings at one time.

When eggs are the specialty the laying-houses represent the larger investment, and the hatching and raising quarters are more incidental to the business. Egg farming is a favorite branch of the business when the breeder is situated near a large city, and in consequence gets a premium over the general market for strictly fresh, nearby eggs. One man can care for 2,000 laying hens, and usually figures upon clearing from $1.10 to $1.50 a head. Thus on an investment of say from $4,000 to $5,000, an income is made that with it many a small merchant would think himself prosperous.

The broiler business is somewhat on the wane. Since the large western packers have taken a hand in the business and so large a tonnage is put in the freezers each summer, the February and March prices are not tempting enough to induce the breeder to market his pound birds at 25 cents, when he can hold them over and sell them in May, June and July, as soft roasters, weighing from four to eight pounds, bringing 30 to 40 cents a pound.

By the latter part of March the cold storage supply is about worked out, and then the broiler market becomes interesting, and the prices rule from 40 to 50 cents during April for pound birds, and 25 to 35 cents per pound during May and June for two-pound birds. By July the market is usually flooded with scrub stock, but the soft roaster is still having his inning.

The soft-roaster business, to-day, however, is to be found in its glory in Massachusetts, between Boston and Fall River. These South Shore breeders begin hatching in August and keep it up until January. They have a long nursery and growing buildings, thoroughly warmed, and go into the winter prepared to take care of their young stock through the most severe weather. Here the Light Brahma is preferred, owing to its greater capacity for taking on flesh. At the season these birds are hatched and reared, the conditions are all against the breeder. The eggs are hard to get, and are very infertile, the chicks are not easily induced to live, and discounting the losses every chick that will reach market has cost on an average of twenty cents each for eggs, oil and labor. But it is worth it. At from two to three months of age the cockerels are caponized,although they are not sold on the market as capons, but as South Shore soft roasters. After caponizing, the cockerels are penned in very close quarters and allowed to exercise but little. They are naturally sluggish and inactive, and this induces quick and heavy growth. These birds are put on the Boston and New York markets during May, June and July at an average weight of eight pounds each. The early birds bring as high as 50 cents a pound, which gradually declines to 35 and 30 cents in August. The grower often gets 40 cents a pound live weight for the early birds, and seldom less than 25 cents at the close of the season. Thirty cents is a fair average price for the greater portion of the output.

The feed and fuel will average ten cents to the pound, which added to the cost of the newly hatched chick makes an eight-pound bird stand the grower $1 each. With an average selling price of 30 cents per pound, or $2.40 a bird, there is a lean profit of $1.40 a head for eleven months' work. Visit this section the latter part of July when the last season's crop has been disposed of, or the early part of August before hatching begins for the next season, and you will find very few of these men at home. They have gone to the Maine woods fishing, or down the shore to a summer cottage, to take a well-earned rest. Many of these men make from $3,000 to $5,000 a year and do not work any harder than many of our merchants, and take no greater risks.

Duck breeding is of but recent growth. Ten years ago there were not half a dozen plants of any importance. To-day they can be counted by the score. This business started in New England and reached a substantial growth there. James Rankin of South Easton, Mass., was the father of the "green duck" business in this country, establishing and carrying on the first plant turning out over 10,000 young ducks yearly. The business rapidly grew and spread and for several years has centered around Eastport, Moriches and Speonk on Long Island. In July one can stand at the head of an inlet at Eastport, about a half mile long, and see on either shore flocks to the grand total of over 50,000 birds; big white fellows, weighing from four to six pounds, the latter ready for market, and all under ten weeks of age. Within a radius of eight miles of this point 500,000 spring ducks are reared every year.

The large White Pekin duck is bred almost exclusively. The hatching season opens in November and continues until the breeders stop laying in July. Breeders lay from 90 to 100 eggs each.

The young ducks art put on the market at from nine to ten weeks old at an average weight of six pounds. The season usually opens in the spring at 30 to 35 cents a pound and some years has fallen to thirteen cents in July. Last year seventeen cents was the bottom price and it bids fair to be the lowest price this year. It usually costs ten cents a pound to put a six-pound duck on the market, including eggs, fuel and feed, labor and marketing.

The duck farm illustrated in The Express to-day is the Crystal Springs duck farm, at Oil City, Pa. It is typical of the well-appointed, conservatively managed duckery. It is owned by B. F. Brundred, who is engaged extensively in the oil business. Many wells are scattered over this farm, which is thus made to do double duty. The main buildings are set off on a side hill, where there is good drainage away from them. Part of the breeders are kept adjacent to a series of terraced ponds, and part over at the head of a ravine, where the hills and timber give them shelter from the cold blasts of winter, while affording shade and a cool brook to swim in in the spring. The young ducks after being taken from the brooders are scattered along a ravine for a mile,where they have both shade and cool running water. The Express man got so enthusiastic photographing the youngsters, bunched off in shady nooks in lots of 1,000 and 2,000 head, presenting so many artistic views, that all his plates were used up before he had gone half way down the line. There were about 20,000 youngsters along this ravine, from six weeks old up to marketable age. In their first full plumage, as white as snow, it was a sight to make even the oldtimer break out in admiration.

Mr. Brundred has invested about $65,000 in this duck farm and leaves it entirely to the management of P. McEvoy. Mr. McEvoy has been at the duck business for the last fifteen years, and is a master hand in every department. He turns out from 35,000 to 40,000 spring ducklings every year and about 5,000 chickens. Mr. McEvoy not only draws a substantial salary, but also gets a percentage of the profits, which together equal the salary drawn by many a manager of large corporations.

The hatching-room is equipped with 81 Model incubators, manufactured by Mr. Cyphers in Buffalo.

There is a fully equipped feed mill on the farm, costing in the neighborhood of $5,000. There is no time to wait on the pleasure of the local miller when there are 20,000 to 30,000 young ducks to be fed. Grain is bought by the carload and elevated to the top of the mill, where it is run down and ground as wanted. All the green stuff the ducks will eat, such as fodder corn and cabbage, is raised on the farm, Mr. McEvoy being a successful truck man and farmer as well as expert duck breeder.

An ice pond has been made at the head of the ravine, where 300 tons of ice a year are cut. This is used in packing the ducks for shipment to market. The dressed ducks shown here represent a day's picking, a little over a ton in weight. These ducks are mostly shipped to the New York market.—The Illustrated Buffalo Express.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1904.

The fall shows are now on in "full blast."

Saratoga and Cambridge were rivals last week, and although separated by few miles, these two important New York state shows drew large entries.

While Cambridge may have dropped a trifle in the number of entries, there was still a great display of fine birds left.

The Saratoga county fair, held at Ballston, N. Y., thanks to the efforts of Secretary N. V. Witbeck, mustered out a collection consisting of some two thousand birds, and some of the best in the country were on dress parade there.

The big show at Toronto, Canada, opened up Saturday, September 3. It was a pleasure to judge and handle the birds at this most excellently managed exhibition.

Not a person was allowed in the poultry building while the judging was going on. The judges started work at 8 a. m. and finished at 1 p. m., when the doors were thrown open to the public. Every premium card was in place and the name of the exhibitor, his address and the variety exhibited was fully displayed on each coop.

Dr. A. W. Bell, the superintendent of poultry and dogs at Toronto, is entitled to unstinted praise for the manner in which he conducted his departments. Cool, systematic, courteous and efficient in every emergency, he is an ideal manager at such functions.

The quality of the birds at Toronto was fully up to the high water mark set at that famous exposition. Full reports, with awards, will appear in our next issue.

Mr. George "Pan" Burgott was in his element at Toronto, judging the dainty Brown and White Leghorns, while Mr. Northup of Raceville, N. Y., had a pleasant time judging a great class of Minorcas. The writer of these notes thoroughly enjoyed the Wyondotte classes he was assigned to.

The Hon. Sharp Butterfield celebrated his twenty-sixth year as judge at Toronto, and he looked like a frisky colt. The old veteran is still in the going, which he attributed to the fact that he has a clear conscience. But Mr. Bismarck Butterfield is inclined to be a bit facetious at times. At the same time this old gentleman from Windsor, Ontario, has forgotten more than some of the younger crowd will ever know.

Mr. Richard Oke, known in Canada and the United States as "Dick," judged the Games and Game Bantams at Toronto, and acquitted himself mighty well. "Dick" has the judicial look and eye and the ability to go with it.

The only thing that worries "Dick" is the entry blanks he has to fill out for the World's Fair at St. Louis. As he has about twenty-five varieties to exhibit, it will take twenty-five sheets to enter them on. The fact that the blanks had not arrived by express or freight up to September 3, is causing "Dick" much concern. But some of the World's Fair rules are much worse than the entry blank farce.

Mr. Arthur O. Shilling, the artist, was present at Toronto, and was one of the American exhibitors that captured the coveted prizes in the Cochin Bantam alley.

Rare old "Willy" McNeil, the dean of the Canadian fancy, and his good old side partner, Allen Bogue, were busy entertaining the American boys as usual, and a good pair they are to tie to.

The first judge to receive his appointment at St. Louis was Dr. C. J. Andruss of Canandaigua, N. Y. He will judge the Minorcas, so we are informed. This is a most excellent choice and we congratulate the management, and the doctor as well.

The New York State Fair opened at Syracuse this week with a very large entry in poultry. The birds are finely arranged in the new Empire coops, and the competition in the American classes is very keen, Barred Plymouth Rocks leading in numbers.

Birds from nearly every section of the United States and Canada are on exhibition, and it looks as if a new era has dawned upon the State Fair which promises to make it the most important fall show in America.

The Rochester show dates have been changed to January 10 to 15, 1905. This brings this great show in between New York and Boston.

Mr. Louis Bonfey has left Willowbrook Farm and has gone back to his old place, Elm Poultry Yards, Hartford, Conn.

"'Hamburg Bill' Minch and his old college chum, Norman Egolf, are doing the circuit with a fine string of birds. Mr. Minch was at Saratoga last week and sampled some of the waters there, after which he made some very pertinent remarks regarding the judging of birds at St. Louis. He intimated that a breeder of Hamburghs was taking long chances in sending birds a thousand miles away to be judged by an unknown quantity or quality. It is just such lack of judgment in managing the poultry affairs there that have caused a great man breeders to stay at home and refuse to show.

Mr. F. C. Hare has taken Mr. R. H. Essex's place as editor of the Reliable Poultry Journal, the latter going to Buffalo, N. Y., in the employ of the Cyphers Incubator company.

Mr. A. F. Hunter has severed his connection with the Reliable Poultry Journal and accepted an editorial position with the American Poultry Advocate.

Supt. Orr writes us as follows: "You may be interested in knowing that the first thirty-five entry sheets received came from seventeen different states, Missouri, New York, Illinois and Ohio leading in the order named. These thirty-five entry sheets represent nearly three hundred birds of twenty-four different varieties. This is a very early straw, but it indicates that this show will be very extensive and comprehensive."

Mr. Edward F. Duffy, president of the Fanciers' Poultry Association of New Jersey, with Mr. Chris. Kirschler, arrived at Deacon Sparks', Swainton, N. J., on Sept. 1, for a stay of four or five days, fishing and shooting. They enjoyed themselves immensely and were successful in securing a good string of both marsh hens and fish and of course had a good time with the Deacon.

We received the following from Judge Daniel P. Shove of Fall River, Mass: "The demand for Rhode Island Reds in the Middle and Western states has increased one hundred per cent. since they were admitted to the Standard at Rochester. They are a grand fowl. Have a R. I. Red hen that lays two eggs every other morning. Better than oil stocks 9,000 feet under ground." Some editors and publishers will say amen to the above and may even be willing to include those in the safe.

REFLECTIONS.

As a busy professional man, who finds his relaxation in the breeding of fancy poultry, the writer has been unpleasantly impressed by the large amount of hostile criticism which a person has to stand, who dares to attempt to do anything for the fancy. The World's Fair committee is a case in point. These gentlemen have suffered a great deal of abuse for their presumption in undertaking a necessary work for exhibitors of poultry at that great show. Where should we be if the original rules of the live stock department had been adhered to. Either we should have to attend and take personal care of our birds for two weeks, or submit them to the mercies of irresponsible individuals of whom, very likely, we knew nothing.

Surely, Messrs. Steinmesch, McGrew and Fishel are men of integrity and honor, or we have no such men in the poultry fancy, and their time is worth something too. But let it dare to be hinted that they expect to be paid for their work, and a howl goes up from one end of the country to the other. Can three such men afford to shoulder the responsibility entailed and give so largely of their time, for nothing? Here we have what promises to be the largest exhibition of poultry the world has ever seen, and all this quibbling over what amounts to an entry fee of only one dollar, when we pay two dollars to our best winter shows and think it worth the money.

Then the clause disclaiming responsibility for exhibits starts another deluge of criticism. We have examined many show catalogues, but have yet to see one which does assume any responsibility for exhibits. It is not easy to see how such responsibility could be assumed, without encouraging dishonesty and "kicking."

The suspicion arises that most of the complaints are due to a self-seeking spirit, and that a great many writers on poultry matters would like to be the whole thing. Unbiassed criticism does a great deal of good, but all criticism is not unbiassed.

LATE CHICKS AND COLD STORAGE

Late chicks are bought and put into cold storage in the fall, being kept in a frozen condition during the winter, and sold in the spring as early broilers, the supply of this kind of poultry being very large. There is one advantage in it, however, which is that it creates a demand for chicks late in the season. There are so many improved modes of keeping dressed poultry that the supply is more evenly made to meet the demand, the surplus being stored for use as required. So far, however, the annual demand for early broiler in April and May has not been affected, while it must be admitted that the prices for large chicks, hatched later than May and sold about October or later, are better than before cold storage increased the demand.—Farm and Fireside.

Few people realize how much the shape of a bird depends on its feathers. In culling out our flocks we have killed two fowls, one of which would be selected on account of its very poor shape and the other because of off color of plumage, but which would be fine in shape. When these two fowls were dressed and laid on the table side by side you could hardly tell one from the other. Again, a bird will appear off in shape probably from being cowed by other birds in the same pen; put it in a pen by itself, or if a male bird, put him in with a few females, and a day will change his shape to the extent of a disguise; this is just a change in his carriage. For this same reason a wild bird should never go in a show room; cowed or scared, its correct shape will not be found out and it will never get its dues.—Pacific Poultryman.

AN EXPLANATION.

Editor American Fancier:—It is singular what peculiar ideas some people get when reading a plain article. I notice that Mr. Asche in your issue of Aug. 27th says that I said the Langshans descended from the Light Brahmas. I am sure there was nothing in my article of Aug. 6th that could reasonably be construed into any such meaning. The only reasonable deduction from what I wrote was this: i. e., that Brahmas, Cochins, Langshans are all of Asiatic origin, and all came from China. The fact that the Langshans were imported some 24 years later does not say that they were of an entirely distinct breed. Fact is, there is but one real distinction between the Langshans and the earlier imported birds, and that is, they have a white skin, whereas the others are yellow skinned birds. I am not sure that all the earlier importations had the yellow skin. I can remember them well for about fifty years, and quite a change has been made in color and type, but whether these early importations were all of the yellow colored skin I can't say. The Langshans are unquestionably the best layers of any of the Asiatics, and lay the same yellow eggs as all the others. This shows them to have had the common origin of all the other Asiatics.

So far as I am aware no other breed—except those which have been made in recent years and contain Asiatic blood in their composition—lay these distinctive yellow eggs, consequently it raises the question in my mind as to the truth of all breeds having descended from the Baukiva. All the Mediterranean breeds lay white eggs, and the earlier fowls, now known as English, lay eggs very nearly white; only a little color can be detected in them. The Games lay an egg white or very nearly so.

TURKEYS.

By T. F. McGrew,

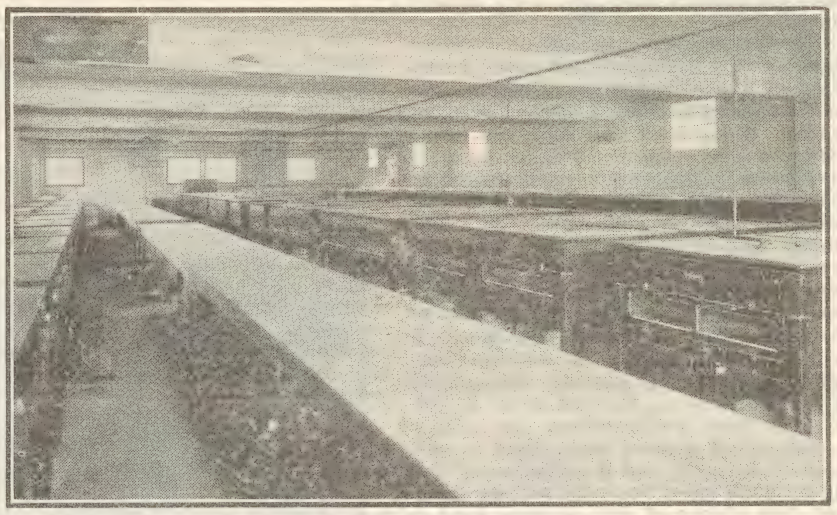
The use of incubators.—The eggs of turkeys can be hatched in incubators quite as well as the eggs of other fowls. It is preferable, however, to have them hatched by the hens that are to brood them; in fact, this is the prevailing custom. There is a feeling of confidence when the eggs are in the care of a broody hen which does not exist when artificial methods are employed which depend for success on the care of an attendant.

Use of brooders.—The growing of poults in brooders has been tried to some extent. The difficulties in the way are as follows: The poults do not seem to realize that they should look down to the floor for food; they run about with their heads up, peeping continually for food, until many die from exhaustion. To overcome this, the food is taken between the fingers and held close to their beaks to induce them to eat. This must be done many times a day for several days, to keep them alive and to teach them to eat. Turkey hens that have reared a brood or two will usually do better with poults than young hens with their first brood. Hens that have had experience make the best mothers, as they pay early and special attention to teaching their young to eat. Some prefer chicken hens to start the young poults, as they devote more attention to teaching the poults to eat.



Growing the poults.—The most difficult part of turkey raising is to know how to care for the poults—to know what to do and when to do it. All that one can learn from others or from reading will not be of equal value to one year's actual experience in caring for them.

Methods of handling.—There are almost as many ways and methods of feeding as there are localities where turkeys are grown. A considerable number who allow their turkeys a good deal of freedom will succeed; others do equally well who follow methods quite the reverse. Some never house the mother hen or the young, while others house them both.

Semiwild nature of turkeys.—While our present-day turkeys are classed as "domestic fowls," they are rather semidomestic when compared with other poultry. For this reason the treatment given them must differ from that given to hens and chickens, and houses or coops that will serve for the latter will not meet the wants of the turkey hen. She must have a house or box in which she can stand erect and stretch her neck and look about. The floor of this must be clean and dry for the poults; it may be of boards, but dry, clean earth is best for both the hen and the poults. This natural environment has a beneficial influence upon the mother and the young turkeys. It adds to both health and spirits, and helps to develop constitutional vigor.

Danger of overdoing.—Satisfactory results can never be secured by handling turkeys like cage birds or hothouse plants. Avoid overdoing the care and attention. Treat them like turkeys, and use common sense in looking after them. Their native home was in the woods and fields; in their present semidomestic condition they need more shelter and care, but they should never be shut in so close as to deprive them of plenty of light, room, and air. They should not be pampered and fed upon unnatural foods; neither should they be overfed at any time. In their wild state they ran about here and there, seeking small grains, seeds ,and bugs, getting plenty of exercise as well as food. Their domestic condition deprives them of the necessity of hunting for their food, and consequently of the exercise that comes from so doing.

Danger of overdoing.—Satisfactory results can never be secured by handling turkeys like cage birds or hothouse plants. Avoid overdoing the care and attention. Treat them like turkeys and use common sense in looking after them. In their wild state they ran about here and there, seeking small grains, seeds, and bugs, getting plenty of exercise as well as food. Their domestic condition deprives them of the necessity of hunting for their food and consequently of the exercise that comes from so doing.

Danger of neglect.—When quite young, the poults are apt to receive more attention than they need. Then, as they grow older and the novelty of attending them wears off, they are too often neglected just at the time when more care should be given to them. For instance, when their feathers are growing and the unusual heat overcomes them, special care may profitably be bestowed; again, the same is true when the frost destroys their natural food supply in the fall. Thousands are lost at these critical periods from lack of a full food supply.

Kind of coops to use.—An open coop, made of slats or lath, may be placed over the mother turkey just prior to the hatching of her eggs, as this will prevent her wandering away with her young when they are hatched. It may be covered on top with tar paper as protection from rain or sun. Such open coops are frequently used in turkey-growing districts, and those who use them could not be induced to change. They should be large enough to provide plenty of space for the mother turkey. Quite often a box too small for the hen to turn about or to stand erect in is used for a coop for the hen and poults. This annoys her and she becomes restless, tramps about, kills her young, and is blamed for taking bad or indifferent care of her offspring, when more than likely if she had room to move about she would be a model mother for the poults.

In a suitable coop, the brood of young turkeys can stay for a day or more in comfort, sheltered from wet and storm or cold, with space enough to move about. In such a coop the very young poults can stay while the mother goes about on the outside for exercise. To have this use of the coop when the hen is out, set up in slides inside the door a piece of board a food wide; this will keep the poults safe from the hot sun or the wet much better than will the triangular pen so often made of three boards.

Almost any kind of pen, coop, or house will do for the turkey hen and poults if it will protect them from rain and storms, if it is large enough, is clean, not too close or warm, and absolutely free from parasitic enemies. These are the important requisites of the structure in which they are to be kept until the poults are well started. They should be allowed their freedom a part of every day when the grass is dry, and should be made to stay within at nights and during wet days till old enough to wander with the mother hen and roost out on the fences or trees.

Treatment of old coops.—Either fresh coops should be provided each year or the old ones should be thoroughly cleansed within and without. Prior to using old coops, paint them thoroughly with crude petroleum in which have been dissolved some naphthalene balls, filling every crack and crevice with this at least a week before they are needed, and be sure that the odor of the preparation has disappeared before using the coops, as it is not beneficial to the young. The features of most importance in cooping the mother and young are plenty of light and room, and freedom from dampness and insect parasites.

When the poults are ready to leave the nest, move the mother hen and her young into the coop provided for them; supply a little food now and then as they need it, and see that the mother has plenty of food and water. Let them alone in the coop till they begin to move about. As soon as they will, let the poults run out on the grass when it is dry, but keep them from the wet grass, as nothing is more detrimental to their growth, unless it be insect parasites. As they advance give them a more plentiful food supply, and guard against any possibility of lice infesting them.

Protection from sun's rays.—While they are young special attention must be given to protection from the direct rays of the sun, exposure to which wilts them completely. At times they will reel under its influence as though suffering from sunstroke,or move about with slow steps, weakly dragging one foot after the other, giving forth a feeble peep that sounds the warning of their approaching end. The blood-sucking parasite has much the same effect upon them when present. When under the influence of both at the same time the chance of survival is small indeed.

Protection from dampness.—Have a dry spot where the young poults may run and exercise. This may be provided by spreading a load or two of coarse sand near the coops, which will furnish a dry foothold, no matter how wet or damp the grass may be. To keep this in sanitary condition go over it once a day with a fine-toothed rake, in order that the sun may dry it thoroughly. When the young turkeys are suitably housed, properly fed, and kept free from lice, they are quite as easy to grow as young chickens.

FEEDING THE NEWLY HATCHED POULTS.

Variety of methods.—A thorough investigation of the methods of feeding young turkeys shows to what extent general rules already cited are followed. While all who succeed seem to adopt nearly the same methods, there are a few differences worthy of consideration. Some feed bread and milk in a saucer as soon as the poults will eat, while others soak bread and milk and squeeze it dry before feeding; some adhere closely to an absolute grain diet, while others feed everything they imagine the poults will eat.

Copying nature.—It should never be forgotten that in the wild state their food was the bugs, worms, seeds, etc., which they could find for themselves, and which were hunted for and scrambled after continually. here was then no overfeeding upon rich unnatural foods that impaired health and produced bowel troubles or other ailments that naturally follow unwholesome food. They subsisted by their own efforts in the wild state while now they are quite too often forced to eat unnatural foods that are furnished in hope of forcing them to an unnatural growth. If the grower wishes to copy nature as nearly as possible, the young poults may be given for their first meal very fine oatmeal or finely cracked wheat or corn, with a little fine grit of some kind and a very little granulated meat scrap. Some of the commercial brands of "poultry food" are also good. They should have clean water convenient where they can help themselves at will.

Use of bread and milk.—As a general rule do not feed them wet food or slops. Poults are seed-eating chicks, not slop eaters. Bread and milk,however, contains elements most valuable in the growing of all kinds of fowls. This food should be considered, when properly given, as one of the best kinds of food for the first day or two. Soak stale bread in sweet milk, press out the milk as completely as possible, and feed the bread to the young poults. Be careful never to use sour milk, nor should the bread thus prepared ever be fed after it has become sour. Feed this, a little at a time, every hour or two for two days or more, then add a little hard-boiled egg, shell and all broken fine, to the soaked bread.

Meat in the ration.—After a day or two on this ration, follow with the ration of finely broken grain already described, and include a little finely cut meat. Make sure that the meat scrap is pure and sweet. Nothing is more injurious to the poults than tainted or infected meat of any kind, as it will disturb their bowels in a very few hours and cause great trouble. Lean beef, well cooked and cut into very small fragments, is good. Be very cautious about feeding green meat or bone. If any of this is fed, have it cut quite fine, giving but little at first, and be absolutely certain that it is fresh and swee. Cooked meat is better for them while young.

Supply of grit.—Coarse sand is excellent for grit, and if sufficient of this is at hand no other grit will be needed; but plenty of grit of some kind is a necessity, for without it the poults can not grind their food.

Danger of overfeeding.—Food should be given them quite early in the morning and at frequent intervals during the day. Never overfeed them, but use discretion in providing plentifully for their necessities. Give them all they will eat willingly and no more. Avoid the use of rich foods, grains in hulls, and millet seed, which is not good for them while they are young; a little of this seed, however, may be fed as they grow older. Too much hard-boiled egg is bad for them, while a reasonable amount with bread is beneficial. An excess has a tendency to clog and congest the bowels, and the writer has seen poults die from the effects of a diet exclusively of egg and millet seed. The same injurious effect may be produced by feeding entirely with milk curds.

Bowel trouble.—Bowel trouble must be considered as an assured result of improper feeding, and may be aggravated by exposure to cold and dampness. Indigestion is a prime factor in the development of this ailment that kills so many turkeys while young. This should be prevented so far as possible by the feeding of finely broken charcoal, which is a safeguard against fermentation in the crop or gizzard, thus aiding digestion. This looseness of the bowels should not be mistaken for cholera. It may usually be relieved by feeding rice that has been boiled almost dry in milk.

Hand feeding.—Too much stress can not be laid upon the practice of hand feeding. The turkey hens are not so attentive to their young as chicken hens. If all who grow turkeys would pay special attention to hand feeding of the poults as soon as they are hatched, much benefit might be gained. To be successful with hand feeding, one must take the food between the fingers and thumb, patiently hold it to the beak of the young turkey, and try to induce it to eat. This method of feeding tames and quiets the young poults, gives them a good start, and prevents the possible contamination of the food by being thrown upon the ground. Although feeding in this manner may appear to involve considerable labor, the resulting benefits are often far in excess of the time and effort expended.

FEEDING THE POULTS AS THEY GROW OLDER.

Food and treatment.—After three weeks the poults may have whole wheat, hulled oats, cracked corn, and a little millet seed, in addition to their other food. Many young turkeys are lost when partly grown, particularly during wet weather after they have been given liberty to roam at will. Much loss may be avoided by going after them wherever they may be and feeding them a little once or twice a day. his plan should be followed during continued wet weather, no matter how far advanced they may be. A continuous wet spell deprives them of the greater part of the bugs and worms they feed upon, and the wet grass, by retarding their motion,tends to reduce vitality. Go after them during such weather and feed them, so as to prevent the bad results that must follow a scarcity of food at such times. Flocks of young turkeys that wander continually should be fed at least once a day, if only a little, to keep them quiet or tame. If fed at least once a day on grain, they will grow faster, mature earlier, and make better size than if not fed at all. Those who make use of these methods secure the best results.

A practical example.—One of the most successful growers in the country feeds the young poults at the start oatmeal, broken wheat, and finely cracked corn; as they grow older whole wheat, hulled oats, and coarser cracked corn, and still later, whole grains of corn. When running at large they are taught to come close to the barns twice a day for food. Following these and similar methods enabled him to bring to maturity, during the unfavorable season of 1903, over 300 white turkeys out of about 335 that were hatched.

Feeding oats.—Hulled oats are used to avoid the injurious effects that arise from feeding oats in the hull, the sharp portions of which are apt to prick and irritate the crop. No more nutritious grain can be fed to growing poults than hulled oats. Wheat and whole or broken corn will do as they grow older, but oats should be added whenever practicable. If hulled oats can not be had, use clipped oats, boiled; drain them thoroughly, and feed when cold. Always select plump, heavy oats, with a large percentage of kernel.

Avoid unsound grain.—Nothing equals good sound grain of all kinds for feeding the growing turkeys. Do not use poor, shriveled, or musty grain of any kind. It is a mistaken notion that it will pay to feed inferior grain to any kind of growing fowl. It is a loss of both time and money to do so, as nothing but disappointment can result from its use. The best results always come from having the best quality of stock and giving it the best food and care.

Eggs.—Receipts for week, 64,823 cases. The unusually active market on nearby fresh eggs, as reported last week, has advanced the market one cent a dozen on this grade, but no attempt is being made to keep within the quotations; it is simply a case of getting the quality wanted and price a secondary consideration. On the other hand, great quantities of ordinary eggs are being dumped into this market and prices on such have retrograded rather than made any forward movement. The many stale and shrunken eggs to be found in these grades have acted as a weight upon any upward market tendency. We quote New York state and nearby fancy selected white, 26 to 27c; fair to good, 24 to 25c.; mixed colors, same quality, 23 to 25c.; western selected, 20 to 21c.; average best 19 to 20c.; southern, 15½ to 18½c. per dozen.

SOMETHING ABOUT AN EGG.

Seventy-four per cent. of an egg is water. Note the importance of providing good fresh clear water for the fowls for best results in egg production.

Fourteen and a half per cent of an egg is protein. Give feed rich in protein. Lean meat, fresh cut clover, alfalfa and wheat bran are also possessed of protein.

Ten and one-half per cent. of an egg is fat.

The shell of an egg is composed of lime, and it takes considerable to produce the shell for an egg every other day. It is a drain on the system, and sea shells, air-slaked limes and fresh cut bone assist the hen materially in the production of eggs. Corn will produce the fat necessary, wheat being preferred to corn in warm climates.—Petaluma Poultry Journal.

The ability to sell to advantage is of as much importance in making a success of the poultry business as any other.

To know when and where to sell, and sell at a profit, and at the greatest profit, one must have not only brains and experience, but a lot of good judgment as well.

It is a very slothful business man who will watch a flock of turkeys growing day by day, or a nice bunch of chickens fast reaching a marketable condition, and not, when the time arrives, have an advantageous market arranged for them.

The wide-awake breeder looks ahead these days, and is not satisfied with a partial success, but wants all there is in it, so to speak, and if he doesn't get it in thes times of high prices, the fault lies directly with himself.

From a general observation as revealed by the pulsations of the poultry press, more and more importance is being attached to poultry houses, perhaps the general interest in the subject is intensified by the ever increasing number of large poultry farms.

The housing of chickens, like human shelters, reveals the whims and fancies of the builder more than anything else about the business. Some are roomy, light and inviting, others dark and gloomy, foul-smelling and repellant.

Some, like Howard Gould's, costing $150,000, with a fence around it at the rate of $10 a foot, others like the squatters on Riverside Drive, mentioned last week, built without cost. Some are stuck away in obscure corners and neglected, the vermin preying nightly with relentless vigor upon the unlucky occupants.

Fowl houses are built for the primary means of shelter and protection, but better the fowls be allowed to find their own night lodging, than be compelled to occupy such hellish shells of torture as I have just described.

There was a time when the people of this city were herded in old fashioned dwellings where the natural light never penetrated, and where they had about as much chance to get a breath of uncontaminated air as they had to fly.

But, thanks to more modern building laws, sanitary buildings only, on up-to-date plans, are being erected at the present day.

If you are using a makeshift habitation go out to it and see if it has the needed amount of light and air, and if clean. If fulfilling the first two requisites I know no one who reads this article will allow the sun to set before cleaning up the premises.

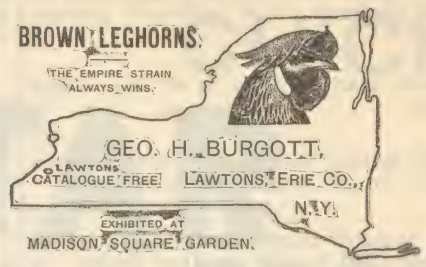
TABASCO SAUCE.

I notice that Mr. Curtis got in out of the wet regarding that sketch interview over in England.

Wonder if he would, if I had not given him a prod?

Did you notice the way in which he wound up that article?

Say, Grant, why do you always in kissing the hand poison the heart?



I'll bet a judge's license at St. Louey that some of those amateurs at drawing life-like "pictures" of standard fowls know more about it than this bunch of "All."

Well, I really do not know what the world is coming to when skim milk masquerades as cream (2nd edition.)

So Essex has changed jobs! Well, I am sorry. Thought he was a fixture at Quincy.

So is that Dutchman. Wonder how much he got from "Der President."

I thought friend Rankin had more sense than to stir up that bunch of brains out "Bosting" way.

So you see there is nothing left for poor me to do but to sue Col. Chas. Mills for alienating my wife's affections.

Tom E. Orr, Supt. Poultry Dept. Universal Exposition, 1904. Hully Gee! Tom, take notes so you can write a book on what not to do in running a show.

A TON OF DRESSED DUCKS.

Matilda 'tother day came near having that fashionable disease called nervous prostration.

Well I nipped it in the bud. You see, she was reading the—what the deuce is the name of it? Well, it's printed in Boston. Oh yes, the American Stock—no not that paper,the other one. It has two names with a straight line between. You know.

She was nearly gone. As a master stroke I snatched it away and gave her the New York Evening Post to read about the war news. It never causes a ruffle.

I wonder why Farm Poultry devotes so much space to the A. P. A.?

While, to be serious, I have nothing against Mr. Robinson. I think he really ought to take a sneak regarding A. P. A.

Mr. Bates' lobster did not make his second appearance in Sept. issue. Is he 2 for a cent kind Geo.?

What a great chance for the honest judges with ability. Gee, but have you filled that blank?

I understand Col. Mills is going to demand a certificate of good health and morals for every bird shown.

I got in trouble 'tother day, and me and Matilda don't speak as we pass by.

Was making out my entry for that no good mongrel variety called Faverolles or Favorites, and I put West Point down as breeder.

She noticed it, and with a look that would freeze ice water on a red hot stove she said: Mr. West Point, how dare you lie like that and go to church three times on Sundays and prayer meeting Tuesdays and Fridays and your wife belongs to the W. C. T. U.

You know in your heart that Dr. Phelps bred those birds, and you want to rob him of his due. You're a lobster.

Yorker can get in poultry raisin!

Frankie Heck has a tough "Branch" on his hands that he cannot bend or break.

Say, Frank, never start anything that you cannot stop. Don't be a lobster.

You're not the only pebble on the beach. Mass. has a Robinson. No, I mean a Plymouth Rock.

"There is no compromise with virture. You either are or you are not."

A bird bought for $10 or $25 for 1 or 2 weeks and then returned, is a deception, pure and simple, and should never be allowed.

But what are you going to do about it?

Wonder if the A. P. A. meeting at St. Louis will be a second edition of Indianapolis?

"Unimpeachable integrity" is one of the necessary qualifications to judge St. Louey. "What fools these mortals be."

"Known ability of the applicant!" Known by whom? Every judge has had a Waterloo, and some have nothing but Waterloos.

"Physical ability, etc.," is good. Deaf and blind to appeals, etc. "Mine Gott in Himmel!" (correct me Yacob if my Dutch is out). They must think we exhibitors are a lot of hack drivers crying for a prize.

Well, all I can say is that it is always the unexpected that happens,and if there are not a lot of lobster judges I'll miss my guess. My only hope is Tom Orr. Be careful, Tom, don't slip your trolley or wet your feet.

I have sent in the blank under escort of the 2nd Battalion, 13th Regt., 2nd Army Corps, Gen'l Grant M. Curtis, Commanding, as follows:

DECK-SWEEPING AT POULTRY SHOWS.

THE AMATEUR'S VIEW.

When one has exhibited half a dozen times at smaller summer shows, to find one's birds pitted against teams of champions, that invariably monopolize the prize money, one must come to the conclusion that the professional exhibitor is a pest, for not only does he secure all the prizes at the large shows, which he has a perfect right to, but there is scarcely a small show in the North and Midlands that is free from his attentions. He paralyzes competition, for no amateur of any experience will venture to enter his birds of second-rate quality when there is any prospect of the professional being present. We cannot doubt the fairness of the awards in the generality of cases. It would be infinitely unjust to the professionals as a class to accuse them of trickery, for their birds are invariably of the highest quality, and shown in the pink of condition, so that, as far as merit is concerned, there can be no question about the justice of the awards.

It is the very presence of these high-quality teams at the smaller shows that constitutes a serious menace to the Fancy, for it threatens the extinction of the amateur, who, it must be acknowledged, is, in his legions, a strong pillar of support. The amateur is a sportsman where the other is not. He is not afraid to pay heavy entry fees at the Dairy, Palace, and Birmingham, in the hope of securing a commendation card, for a money prize is out of the question. What, one may ask, would become of a show like the Dairy if the amateur, who exhibits for the love of the thing, did not support it so heartily? Take a catalogue of last year's show, and see how many you find exhibiting of those who, during the summer, are rushing from show to show for the sake of the ten-shilling prizes, while the amateur, to whom these prizes should be some little reward for his sacrifices and his sportsmanship, is forced to be content with commended cards or keep his birds at home.

What must be the effect? If a man cannot win prizes through being crowded out by "deck-sweepers," he will sooner or later come to the conslusion that it is absolutely useless showing either at a large show or a small one. If he does not show, what is the use of keeping fancy birds at all? He would do better to devote his time to laying strains and the like Consequently, the Fancy will be reduced to two classes—those who breed first-class exhibition birds, and those who buy and show them. There will be no room for the useful but humble amateur. The shows will miss him sadly, and so will the breeders. The latter may sell half-a-dozen of their very best birds to the professional exhibitors, but where will they find a market for the dozens of second-class specimens, breeding pens, and eggs for setting? A breeder who turns out some hundreds of birds every year will tell you that the amateur is the customer whom he values most. A first-class exhibition bird needs no selling. Professional exhibitors will fall over one another in their eagerness to get it. But they will have nothing to do with the second-raters, for which the amateur is the natural customer. Yet under present conditions the breeders who would suffer most by his loss are allowing this good customer to be starved out of existence without raising a hand to save him. Though their influence is sufficient to command attention, they will not trouble to make even an appeal on behalf of the amateur, whose loss they will only realize when he has disappeared.

Limit shows have been recommended as a remedy, but at the best they are imperfect. Limit the value to such an extent as to keep out the professional, and in all probability you also keep at home many decent birds belonging to the class you are endeavoring to shield. Limit the radius, and you likewise keep away many good amateurs, and possibly let in one or two professionals at the same time.

Then, again, do the shows actually realize that the professional "deck-sweeper" is not their best friend? Only recently one of the executives of a northern show resented the statement that a firm of "deck-sweepers" would refrain from exhibiting at that show as being uncomplimentary. A good many summer show managers, while professing a regret that entries are so scarce, do not relish the idea of doing without professional exhibits. They like to have birds of such good quality of their shows, and they welcome a well-filled entry form, though, of course, they forgot that each of these entries costs perhaps half-a-dozen from the amateurs. The summer shows, too, are generally independent of the entries. Bands, sports, dancing and side shows are the real attractions for the public, and so long as the "gate" is good it does not signify so very much whether classes fill well or ill. In fact, some secretaries would very much rather see a small class of good birds belonging to professionals than a score or so of second-raters from sport-lovings amateurs, more especially if the classes have been previously guaranteed by some misguided person or specialist club.

This being the case, many of these summer shows are doing harm rather than service to the Fancy, in that they deliberately encourage the profesionals while presumably catering for the amateurs. The latter as a body are a long-suffering class. For years they have been content to pay their entrance fees, only to see the professionals usurp the comparatively small prizes that by all the laws of common decency should be theirs. But the time must come when they will realize the uselessnes of further striving against either thoughtless or heartless opponents. The worm will turn, the then, when the amateur has at last been starved out, everyone—the professionals who have scooped in his entry fees, the breeders, show promoters, appliance makers, all who live on the Fancy—will declare: "What a pity! Can't we bring him to life again?" Would it not be more to the point to prevent his extinction by popular demontsration against the methods of the "deck-sweeper?"

Here is an example of these methods. Two well-known firms, who win everywhere, lately discovered that they were clashing in two certain varieties. They thereupon concluded an agreement, by which one firm consented to relinquish one breed and the other the other. Is this sportsmanlike? Is this the sort of thing to promote the best interests of the Fancy?

GEYER'S SCURVY CURE FOR POULTRY was the first article introduced to the public for this purpose, which has been thoroughly tested in the last ten years by many of our brother fanciers who are willing to say with us that there is no other article on the market like this that can be relied on to do its work properly. It is something that the poultry fancier, who appreciates his fine birds, needs very much. What looks more disgraceful than a fine flock of chickens, many, or all of them, having their legs coated with a thick, hard, scabby crust which is called scurvy? It spoils the appearance of the birds and is very annoying to them. It is also contagious. Here we have a sure cure for this ugly disease. By following the directions we guarantee that it will take off that ugly, hard coat and leave the legs clean and smooth and give them their natural color. It also has no equal for healing sores and frosted combs and wattels. It makes them very bright and red. It is just what the exhibitor wants to prepare his birds for the exhibition room. Some of our customers tell us that they have tried it with good results for weak legs. We only ask you to give it a trial. It is put up in tin boxes. Money must accompany all orders. Price, 25 cents. Address, G. A. Geyer, Florin, Pa. 560tf

The Story of a Poultry Farm

The Struggles, Trials, Experiences and Successes of a Practical Poultry Fancier.

[By W. H. Card.]

Poultry papers, since the year one, have demonstrated and proved by calculations and theories innumerable that there is money in the hen business. "Like the school boy's head, there's millions in it," be that as it may.

My love for the fancy induced me to undertake it as a life work, and as I have made good up to date, I shall endeavor to tell how my experiences support their theories and figures.

Since I was old enough to own a chicken I had dreams of the life of a hen crank on a hen farm; of the easy-swinging hammock, the wide-spreading shade trees, while the cocks crow and the hens cackled; of the shute down which rolled eggs to market and the return shute back which rolled the bright dollars, continuous streams of eggs and golden coin. In fancy I saw the well-stocked farm and treasury, the care free existence, the thousands of feathered favorites on grassy plain and slope, the feather study, the evolution and growth to perfection, an ideal life; almost a conception of heaven to a hen crank and fancier; all these and many more were the castles built during those roseate dreams, with no hint of egg famines, of the disagreeable duties necessary to cleanliness, of the hard labor of water bringing, of vermin and pests which multiplied by millions as the chickens tried to multiply by tens; of the tons and tons of feed necessary, of the 365 days of steady drugery (18 hours per day), of the worry, wonder and stress of mind as to the wherewith to square with the butcher, the baker, the miller and the candlestick maker; no hint, even, in those dreams, of the friends who saw failure inevitable, who misconstrued your every word and look, who "told you so" seven days a week, who branded poultry papers as falsehoods entire, who helped one on in the struggle by continual wordy shower baths, and as I, in retrospection, live again those dreams, coupled with knowledge gained by experience, I feel that ignorance to a beginner in hen culture is truly bliss, and surely the folly of being wise at the beginning is in loss of courage necessary to win success. In writing these articles I shall advance no theories, but state only facts as they have come to me in the past six years, whether they conform to or contradict popular theories and notions of the business. My main object in writing is not to benefit the wealthy fancier who does not have to worry or wonder how the next month's feed bill is going to be paid, who complacently watches our struggles as he would a horse race or any other congenial amusement, perhaps reading these articles in the same condition of mind without understanding their meaning, because he never had to; but I am writing to benefit those who, like myself, are trying the fascinating puzzle of making something from nothing; or, in other words, are working for success in the hen business without a dollar to start with, who know what it is to hope against hope, amid defeats, disasters, and the thousand and one woes incident to the work, when conducted by a hen crank with a flat pocketbook.

In 1898, I purchased the property I now occupy, of five acres of cleared land and two of woodland, and house and barn, my only other assets being 50 scrub hens, a few Polish fowls and a plaster on my back that made me sympathize with Atlas, who is supposed to carry the world on his shoulders, the aforesaid plaster being bound in cast iron agreement and calling for continuous weekly payments and interest semi-annually till paid for, to my mind now, "a start very much worse than nothing." The first year a carpenter and myself built 300 feet of hen houses (scratching shed plan) and ran about 3,000 feet of wire fence, making division yards for each house, and raised 300 chicks in brooders and with hens, buying in the fall about 125 extra pullets, which was the beginning of my troubles. Some that I had bought had a touch of roup, and as the coops were not finished till late in the fall, they gathered dampness which, with the roup, produced an epidemic whereby over 300 of the young and thrifty chicks were suddenly "sick abed" with swelled heads, eyeballs as large as walnuts, loathsome discharges from mouth, eyes and nostrils, horrible smells, and all the many "pleasant" attendants of the roup plague. My hen houses soon began to take on the appearance of hospitals, with sick chicks galore, quinine pills, peroxide of hydrogen, listerine and blisterine, liniments and brimstone, which last, when burning, heightened the idea that my hen fanciers' heaven was a hen fanciers' inferno. Never will the four months from September till January pass from memory, with its all day and half the night work, trying to cure the sick chicks by crowding down mucous gummed throats pills and pellets, swabbing with this and that remedy, burning brimstone, scattering disinfectants, and burying the dead, with a heart ache that throbbed even from my skull to my toes, getting to bed near midnight to sleep by fits and starts, thinking and dreaming of that nightmare of a plaster and its iron trimmings till 4:30 a. m., when I would get out to again go through the whole horrible routine of work and worry, which was fast curing me of the hen fever. In the aforesaid four months I lost over 100 full grown, young fowls and remedies and positive cures cost me $30.00 more.

Believing always that pluck is luck, I filled my pockets with grit and sand and kept to the rack. About Jan. 1st I read an advertisement in the American Fancier of a roup cure that one could place in the drinking water, doing away with the loathsome work of pill stuffing, etc. I sent for a trial box and in the next 3 months used just $2.50 worth with the result that every sick case was cured except two that I gave a dose of hatchet. By this time hens were beginning to lay and market egg customers were taking up the output. Hatching season came on and all moved serenely as far as losses were concerned. All of the above facts which I noted from day to day in an experience book to which I now turn when in doubt as to procedure for best results. The seasons since show their losses, etc., but nothing like my first season's baptism.

By sticking to the rack and almost eating hay, or like Nebuchanezzer of old,eating grass or whatever the place could produce; in short, by practicing self denial and rigid economy, I had the pleasure in the year of 1901 of feeling the last tear of that onerous plaster, with no desire to ever renew its acquaintance under any circumstance. And right here let me say, when the personal pronoun "I" is used, it means "we," because my success is due to the assistance of the better half of the concern, and I believe no hen crank, however, well quarified, can succeed without the help, tact, advice and encouragement of the woman in the business.

DECK-SWEEPING AT POULTRY SHOWS.

THE PROFESSIONAL VIEW.

Very few people appear to realize the great expense to which the extensive exhibitor—call him professional or his prizes. First of all, he pays fabulous prices for his birds—£50 or £60 in some cases; then, his establishment is fitted up on an elaborate scale, not, as some people suppose, to create a good impression on visitors, but to provide proper comfort for the birds, without which it is impossible to maintain them in good health and condition. Again, the wages of poultrymen and assistant may total quite £5 a week all the year round, not to speak of travelling expenses. Consider all this, and say whether the professional, as you call him, can be righteously blamed for winning where he can.

Ninety out of every hundred persons who regularly condemn the "deck-sweeper" when they find themselves beaten never trouble to consider this question of initial expense. They who possibly spend £5 a year over their birds, above and beyond the ordinary food bills and the like for maintenance, coolly insinuate a perfect right to monopolize all the smaller shows to the exclusion of those who maybe spend £500. The professionals, they tell us, should confine themselves to the Dairy, Palace, Birmingham, and International, and perhaps a score more shows that give good prize money, and may be called important, each man would realize less than £20 per annum as receipts from showing, and, instead of paying expenses, as the majority now manage to do, all would experience phenomenally heavy losses, while the amateur, with his cheap, inferior, and badly-shown exhibits, would be lining his pockets with gold, and chuckling at the superiority of poultry-keeping as a means of making money over shoe-making or shop-keeping. It would simply be a case of the amateur becoming the professional and vice versa, which is a revolutionary idea altogether; and anyone possessed of reasonable intelligence will agree that there is nothing wrong with the unwritten laws of civilized society—that reward must go to him who seeks it, and dividends to him who invests. The typical dissatisfied amateur would reap interest at the rate of 100 per cent. on his poultry investment, but grudge the 10 per cent. of the big capitalist.

Again, for what reasons are poultry shows held if it is not to encourage the breeding and exhibiting of the best? Go to a show secretary and ask him if he likes to see birds of quality at his exhibition? Eight out of ten would deliberately seek the entries of the man who can show really good stuff, which does not look as if they considered the professional exhibitor a nuisance. A certain section of small amateurs look upon the professional as something worse, however. If he beats their second-rate birds with his first-raters, he is accused of being in league with the judge, or practising any number of unspeakable tricks,and all this oblivious of the fact that anyone but a most jealous and prejudiced person would have no difficulty in comparing the relative merits of the birds. This conduct on the part of a comparatively small section certainly does not encourage the professional to think more kindly of his amateur brethren.

Not only does the professional invariably exhibit good stock, but he shows them in good condition,in which the amateur generally fails, mainly because he will not or cannot give the necessary time and trouble. During the show season the professional or his poultryman continually labor, with the help of expensive but necessary appliances, to keep the birds in tip-top form, and men who spend time and money in this way naturally look to reap some reward. Otherwise, what would be the use of keeping birds at all? Men cannot be expected to pay £20 or £30 for a specimen merely for the sake of looking at it at home. They must realize upon it, and as quickly as possible, for the life of a show bird is ofttimes very short. The amateur knows all this, and when he buys a bird for £5 or £10 he is glad enough to scoop in as many prizes as he can at the expense of less fortunate friends. But what is evidently a most sensible proceeding on his part becomes a crime on others.

All this outcry against the professional "deck-sweeper" is based upon selfishness, and largely upon jealousy. The amateur believes that he with his small interests at stake and his inferior birds, should hold the monopoly of the smaller shows, where the first prize does not exceed 10s.—that is, more than 50 per cent. of the shows held during a year. These are to be his right, without molestation, while the men who have hundreds of pounds at stake are to vie with one another at only the important events. The professional never has claimed that he exhibits for the sake of getting beaten, nor has the average amateur such philanthropic intentions. Consequently it is the height of absurdity to blame a man for showing where he knows the competition will not be strong against him.

And, after all, the amateur has a remedy if he will apply it. He can promote limit shows, and so keep the big man away; but the question is whether show promoters value amateur support as highly as one is asked to believe. What would happen if the amateur and small capitalist had their own way, and monopolized over 50 per cent. of the shows? Many of the big exhibitors of the day would decline the fancy, and the prices of show birds would fall with a run. Hundreds of the little men who breed and sell good birds at high prices would immediately feel the pinch, scores of experienced poultrymen would be out of employment, and food and appliance dealers would lose their best customers, and there would be nothing left to promote that spirit of keenness and enterprise that is now a characteristic of the Fancy. Can anyone view such a prospect with equanimity?

Finally, does the term "professional" fairly describe the class of exhibitors to whose success the amateur takes exception? Some certainly do make their living out of exhibiting poultry, but many others are men of wealth, who look upon poultry showing as a sport and relaxation from business. They retain highly-paid poultrymen, and, besides paying the best prices for everything, they invariably do great service to the Fancy in a financial sense. These men are not professionals, though they may be "deck-sweepers." But then, it is not so much a matter of name as of opportunity. Put any amateur in possession of the chance to show successfully, and he would be quite as keen a "deck-sweeper" as his more fortunate rival.—Poultry, England.

THE SOUTHERN MICHIGAN P. P. AND G. F. ASSOCIATION.

Editor American Fancier:—Thursday evening, Aug. 18th, a number of the fanciers of Hudson and vicinity met and organized an association, to be known as the Southern Michigan Poultry, Pigeon and Game Fanciers' Association.

The object of this association is to promote and improve the culture of Poultry, Pigeon and Game; to see that each variety receives proper classification and to offer specials to be competed for only by members of the association at the different shows.

The following officers were elected: Milton G. Bryant, Pres.; Edward R. West, 1st vice pres.; Frank Hoedley, 2nd vice pres.; H.A. Boies, Secy-Treas. Advisory board, E. E. Baldwin, (chairman) Geo. P. Rogers, Lewis H. Harris, Bruce A. Fields, John F. Sharp.

We will give a show sometime in February, dates and judge to be announced later. Poultry, pigeon and game will each receive equal attention, good cash premiums will be offered, all birds will be scored first day of show, by a good judge, suitable quarters will be provided and best of care given.

We have a good start for a big association and applications are coming in fast.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

..To Members American Single Comb Leghorn Club:

As our Club has virtually been without a secretary the last six months, and as it is certain that a goodly number of the members and Brown Leghorn breeders will attend St. Louis Exposition poultry show, it will be highly desirable and timely that a meeting of the club be held there.

Therefore I would name Saturday, October 29th, for said meeting. Hour and place announcement to be conspicuously posted at the show.

As the American Single Comb Brown Leghorn Club stands for one of the best and oldest varieties in the Standard, it deserves being put on the broad and sound basis worthy of the name and breed. To this end it is especially urged that this meeting be a representative one, and that all that possibly can do so, whether members or not, will attend. Those unable to be present will be assured of a hearing if they will mail same in letter form to me for presentation at the meeting.

At the request of several members I make the suggestion that while on the Exposition grounds, or at least while in poultry buildings, Brown Leghorn men wear on coat lapel or in hat band a feather from back of female Brown Leghorn, thus allowing of the ready recognition and social meeting and acquaintance of fanciers and breeders of the "queen of all the layers."

Write for catalog and mating list describing our plant and America's greatest winning strain of Barred Rocks.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1904.

The Story of a Poultry Farm, which we begin in this issue of The American Fancier, will be read with more than usual interest. It is written by Mr. W. H. Card of Bristol, Conn., and is founded on facts. All the bitter, early trials and experiences are given, as well as the later successes. It is a truthful picture all the way through, for all who know Mr. Card are aware of his high regard for the truth, and being a man with a conscience besides, his conclsuions reached in the forthcoming series of articles should prove of considerable value to our readers.

The new illustrated Standard will not be ready until December at the earliest. This is in response to inquiries. The time it takes to finish the numerous illustrations is the cause of most of the delay as the copy for the printed portion of the book is in the hands of the printers.

Another great county fair where entries are confined to the exhibitors residing within its territory is Cobleskill, N. Y., to be held next week. Secretary Stanton C. Shaver has the reins in charge, and that means success. Cobleskill was the first fair to put up a model poultry building, with model coops, in this country.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., is on this week, as fine as ever in the poultry and other lines. The entries are large and the quality is fine. But that is what is expected with T. C. Van Wyck in charge of the poultry and pigeons.

Augusta, Georgia, will hold its annual show early in November, under the auspices of one of the best established poultry and pet stock associations in the country. Further particulars later.

The poultry, pigeon and pet stock exhibits at the Fulton county fair, Johnstown, N. Y., last week were record breakers. Although the entries are limited to exhibitors residing in the county, the poultry building was crowded to overflowing with the large varieties, while the hundreds of Bantams filled up most the baseball grand stand above. The fanciers of Fulton county did themselves proud, for not only in quantity did they excel.

We were greatly disappointed in not getting the official awards at Toronto and Syracuse in time for publication in this issue of The American Fancier, consequently must hold same over until next week.

Mr. George L. Harding, Binghamton, N. Y., was one of the interested visitors at the New York State Fair last week. "Uncle George" has scored a big hit with his new and excellent Granulated Milk Food for poultry. It does all that is claimed for it. But that is what all of Harding's famous Uncle Sam productions do.

W. B. Coughtry has accepted the position of poultry manager on Mr. Walter McEwen's fine Lauderdale Farm, Londonville, N. Y. Mr. Coughtry has the experience to handle the fine stock on the place.

* * *

Mr. H. M. Moyer, Bechtelsville, Pa., a Brown Leghorn specialist, an old fancier and breeder, as well as advertiser and subscriber of The American Fancier, made a sweep at the Pennsylvania State Fair last week, winning first prize on cock, hen, cockerel, pullet and breeding pen, the only entries he had there. As the Keystone State produces many "hummers" in the Brown Leghorn line, Mr. Moyer's record is all the more remarkable.

Owing to a misunderstanding, the cartoon of "Deacon Ivory" will not appear until next month. Our Parisian artist thought he was to sketch a bleached Indian who uses per-oxide of hydrogen, when it should have been an American gentleman and fancier that uses the good old soap three times a day.

Lost, Strayed or Stolen: Artist Arthur O. Schilling of Rochester, N. Y. Last seen at Toronto on Friday evening looking at the fireworks and supposed to have been in company with Mr. Game Houdan Burgott of Lawtons, N. Y. Any information relative to Mr. Schilling's whereabouts will be greatly appreciated by our Rochester editor, R. Raymond, as well as at this office.

It is whispered that Herr Tallinger of the Flower City is starting a judges' school on his new ranch. Special correspondence a feature.

We were glad to meet Mr. Ruliffson, president of the National Bantam Association, during a brief visit at Rochester last week. Mr. Ruliffson has recovered his usual good health after a two weeks' sojourn in the country, has raised some exceedingly fine Black Cohin Bantams, and is ready for the winter shows, and expects to visit a few of the big 'uns. We regret not to have met Secretary Drechsler of the Rochester show, as he was busy umpiring a game of baseball between two teams of deaf mutes. The latter did not question his decisions.

The Hon. T. F. McGrew, while ostensibly on a visit to the State Fair, was in reality out gunning among the politicians and with rare success. The "only Tom" caught on in great shape and will be one of the spellbinders this fall, if his duties at St. Louis will permit. As an orator Mr. McGrew is in a very high class. He can say things gracefully and vigorously without descending into personalities.

How many of the old line judges signed that World's Fair application blank? Two at least in the Empire State did not, and there are others to hear from, as well as others in other states.

This is the age of graft. We said that several times in the past year. We say it again. It exists in the poultry showing business, where it has no right to even blossom as a two-day toad-stool. But it is there all the same. The A. P. A. has a pretty job on its hands if it desires to get rid of that blighting piece of business. It can be done, however. Pluck, nerve and don't-care-who-it-hits will accomplish it. This refers to the members of the A. P. A. that are looking for this little graft. What the outsiders do in this direction may be hard to control, but a judicious dose of medicine applied to the members may make others more careful in the future. A clean fancy is what we want and the sooner we start to get it, the better.

The entries at the World's Fair closed with postmark dated September 10. As we go to press (September 14) the following information from our correspondent in St.Louis, dated Sept. 10, is at hand:

"Entries started late—only 54 entry sheets raching us by Sept. 3. Up to close of business Friday, Sept. 9, 277 exhibitors from 29 different states had entered 90 varieties.

Of coop fees paid in the eight states that lead with from $100 to $400 each, are Mo., Ill., N. Y. Ind., Ohio, N. J., Iowa and Mich. in order named.

The eight leading varieties with more than 100 birds each, are White Wyandottes, Buff Rocks, Barred Rocks, White Rocks, S. C. W. Leghorns, Silver Wyandottes, S. C. Brown Leghorns and S. C. Black Minorcas—in order named. Mail is coming in fast now and it will take several days to get entries booked so as to know definitly what the show will be."

As the bulk of entries are mailed on date of closing, no estimate of the number of birds entered can be made at this writing. It would seem, however, that the number of exhibitors and entries will fall short of the early expectations of the managers.

County shows for county exhibitors are a fine thing to centralize the prize money. But as a rule other counties are heard from at all these functions. It's a beautiful game all 'round.

Judge W. C. Denny was a busy man handing out premium lists and entry blanks of the World's Fair, while in Syracuse last week. Denny is a hustler, and no mistake.

President Jacquins and Secretary Denny were unanimously re-elected at a meeting of the New York State Poultry Society held at the State Fair on Wednesday, September 7. Mr. Jacquins was also elected delegate to visit the poultry school at Cornell University.

The many good friends of Mr. E. Latham, who for a decade or more has acted as one of the chief officers of the National Bantam association, will regret to learn,that owing to the death of his father at the old homestead, Groton, Conn., he will have to forego the pleasure of consummating his plans toward the establishment of a poultry farm there. We regret this most sincerely, as Mr. Latham has been one of the most conscientious workers in behalf of the Bantam fancy we have ever known. The sad loss he has sustained is not to be measured or written in words; the loss the fancy has sustained, and we trust not permanently, in being without Mr. Latham's good work and influence, is sincerely and thoroughly appreciated by all who have had the plasure of his acquaintance.

Mr. C. S. Purdy, Stamford, Conn., has bought the entire collection of fine Bantams, including good will, etc., owned by the Nabob Bantam Yards, Fon du Lac, Wisconsin. Mr. J. C. Jacks, proprietor of the Nabob Yards, made an enviable reputation at the great shows in the west, against the strongest competition.

Our esteemed contmporary, Farm-Poultry, published semi-monthly at Boston, Mass., has reduced its subscription price to fifty cents a year, making it the best and cheapest poultry paper of its kind published in the United States, considering its quality.

We are indebted to Spratts Patent (America) Limited, Newark, N. J., for a finely executed map of the World's Fair Grounds, St. Louis, Mo., showing the location of their famous exhibits. We wish to add that all visiting fanciers will be welcomed and entertained by the officials in charge.

FROM 20 INCUBATORS TO 20,000

That is the unbeaten record of the Prairie State Incubators: 20 sold first year—20,000 sold in 1903. Prominent duck and poultry breeders favor the Prairie State because it's always reliable and gives high per cent hatches. The United States Government uses them exclusively. Be sure to send for our free, illustrated catalog full of pictures—among them photos of incubator rooms where 20 to 80 of our machines are in active operation.

The exquisite features of Judge George H. Burgott, adorned the first page of the Morning Times, Hornellsville, N. Y., on September 1. A very clever reading notice accompanied "the picter." Mr. Burgott got what he deserved for he is a royal good fellow and a first class judge of poultry.

TURKEYS.

By T. F. McGrew,

(Continue from September 10.)

FEEDING FOR MARKET.

The best ration.—As soon as the weather begins to turn cold and insect food becomes scarce, an increased grain diet must be provided for the growing turkeys. A ration of wheat and corn is the best. Do not feed them too much at first, but gradually increase the supply until they are having all they will eat.

Plenty of food with no confinement.—Those who succeed best in having the turkeys ready and in fine condition for the early market are those who allow them their freedom and feed them all they will eat of wholesome fattening grain. Even when finishing them, it is not well to cnfine them. If they are fed each day at regular hours and at the same place, it will be an easy matter to have them come three times a day to this place to be fed. Their longing for food being supplied, less violent exercise will be taken, and the energy that would be expended in their wanderings in search of food will be directed in the more profitable channel of growing and developing for market. Turkeys that are poorly fed during the fall expend in seeking food that is no longer attainable considerable of the flesh they may have gained.

Turkeys compared with hogs and cattle.—When feeding turkeys for market it must be remembered that they will sell for considerably more per pound than can be obtained for hogs or cattle, while the actual food cost per pound of turkey meat is but little if any more than for hogs or cattle. It will always pay well to give to growing turkeys all the grain they can eat.

Advantage of the early market.—Keep them growing from start to finish, and have them ready for the Thanksgiving market, when prices are usually the best. This may be accomplished quite easily with all the early broods, provided they are properly and liberally fed, as the fall weather begins to remove their natural food supply of worms, bugs, seeds, and herbs of all kinds. In feeding for market, the end most desired is complete growth and the greatest possible weight by Thanksgiving time. The records of years show the highest value for market turkeys to have been reached during the last week of November. While the demand is not quite so brisk at Christmas time, the prices are almost as high.

What and when to feed.—Old corn is better than new for heavy feeding, as the latter is apt to cause looseness of the bowels. If necessary to use new corn, it should be introduced into the ration gradually. If the poults have gained a strong, well-developed physique by early fall, they will be in fine condition for heavy feeding. As soon as they have become accustomed to grain feeding, they may be fed once or even twice a day on ground oats and corn meal mixed with milk. This should be given in addition to an abundance of wheat and corn. They should be fed each time just what they will eat up clean with a relish. Feed the grain,mornings and evenings, and the mixture, at noon or twice between morning and evening as best suits your convenience. See that plenty of sharp grit is always at hand for their use and provide a constant supply of fresh water where they may help themselves.

Feeding for a fancy price.—Some who grow turkeys for a fancy market feed them chestnuts and celery seed during the last few weeks of fattening. These are rather expensive articles of food and can only be used by those who sell their product for almost double the average market price. Such feeding imparts a pleasant flavor that adds value to the turkeys which are finished in this way, and these find ready sale at the highest prices for the tables of those with whom cost is a minor consideration. Where the scale of prices is regulated solely by quality, the finest selected grades will sell from 9 to 12 cents per pound higher than will the lower grades. To grow the best is quite as easy and but little more expensive than to grow the poorer grades, and the profit gained is almost double.

ENGLISH METHODS OF FEEDING.

Feeding in confinement; the ration.—The English methods differ somewhat from those followed in America. Some confine their turkeys either in small inclosures or in houses, while others feed profusely morning and evening and range them during the day. The inclosures or yards are fenced in with wire; the turkeys are kept within this limited range, and are fed heavily twice a day on a mixture of ground oats and milk in the morning and whole oats at night. Some add boiled vegetables, while others feed a mixture of ground oats, barley, and corn, equal parts, with table scraps, boiled carrots, potatoes, and other vegetables mixed with milk. This has a tendency to make the flesh plump and white. Near the end of the feeding, some fat—suet or butcher's scraps—is cooked and mixed into the mash.

Crate fattening and cramming.—Some go so far as to crate-fatten, just as chickens and other poultry are finished for market. Another plan is to cram them every morning and evening and drive them out to pasture during the day. They are crammed with boluses made of barley meal, potatoes, some small-cut greens, and a little bran. These are dipped in milk and pushed down the throat, enough being fed in this way to fill the crop.

Results of English methods.—The English method of feeding produces a fully supply of flesh upon the carcass, which is of the whitish of pinkish-white color so popular in all foreign countries. Their methods of feeding make solid meat with not so much fat as is produced by feeding more corn. When corn is largely fed, there is a gathering of fat under the skin and in the interior, as well as between the tissues. The globules of fat between the tissues of fowls fed on more oats and less corn are firm and solid. The fat from corn feeding is not so solid and is less dense in composition. While the American method of feeding increases both size and weight, it will not produce so desirable a quality of meat as can be grown from the English way of feeding.

In using ground oats, it is always better to remove hulls from the meal. These hulls are no better as food than an equal amount of straw, and it requires more grinding in the gizzard to reduce the hulls than it would to grind double the amount of grain. There is no reason why the fowls should waste energy in grinding a useless substance when it may be prevented.

FEEDING STOCK TURKEYS.

Separation from market stock.—Few growers separate their stock or breeding turkeys from those intended for market. Entirely too many growers feed them all together, sell the most thrifty for market, and keep the least matured for producing stock. This is a great mistake; the very best should be selected for producing stock, and the rest fed for market. Those selected for use in breeding, however, should be separated and fed by themselves if possible. The best food for stock turkeys is boiled oats drained of all moisture, some wheat, and a little corn. This will keep them in good, healthy condition and quite full enough of flesh. It is a mistake to keep as producers fowls poor or thin in flesh. They must be in good condition, plump, but not overfat.

Prime condition and how to secure it.—For the best results in egg laying, hens should be neither too fat nor too lean. The yolk of the egg is normally one-third fat, about one-sixth protein, and the remainder water. The hen must have enough substance to her body to insure the production of the eggs. An excess of fat in the body arises from too much fattening food during the season of no egg production. Hens actively engaged in egg producing seldom become overfat. If kept in prime condition out of laying season, they may be well fed on boiled oats, wheat, and some corn, when the laying season is at hand. The main point in feeding stock turkeys out of laying season is to feed them enough fully to sustain their physical condition and health, so as to have them in proper condition for egg production when the time arrives. Then a suitable ration for egg production may be adopted.

MARKETING.

After the turkeys are grown and ready for market, quite as much care and attention should be given to the killing and shipping as to the proper growing. Where these things can not be done to good advantage, it is better to sell them alive. Buyers who are prepared to kill, dress, pack, and ship turkeys, and to save the feathers, should be in position to pay what they are worth alive; and should be able to handle them at a profit, better than can the grower, who may not be prepared to do the work to advantage. So much depends upon marketing them in the best condition that small growers should either dress and sell to their home market or, providing it can be done at a fair price, sell alive to someone who makes a business of handling such stock.

TABASCO SAUCE.

Now, look here, Mr. Commercial Poultry, I want you to understand that neither The American Fancier nor West Point have any rivals.

The best way for a man to keep out of trouble is to leave other folks' business alone. (Critics of the A. P. A. please take notice.)

"An electric fan will buzz away all day and blow off a lot of wind, but it never says anything."—Ex.

There are some editors who will buzz a whole year on some questions and never get nearer than "Glittering Generalities."

Curtis is a man who will take hold and push like fun. "He does things," and that is what counts, after all.

He may be radically wrong, sometimes hot-headed and go off half-cocked; at the same time he's a hustler, and in many ways I like him.

Conservative men are like paper weights—they hold things down, but seldom move.

Dear me, but there is lots of trouble in this world. Just got a special delivery from Col. Mills asking if I did not put down too much for railroad fare?

Sept. 10 is history now, and what a lot of lobsters are holding their breath.

George Burgott came in my office tother day, all smiles. Gee, but wasn't he happy!

"Hello, George! What's up? Been appointed judge at St. Louey, eh?"

"Naw, what's the use? but Dave Nichols has just presented me with a fine Italian watch. It's a bute."

"Italian watch? I can't see wherein is it different?"

"Say, look here, West Point, your a lobster. Can't you see it right on the face. Can't you see the day-go (Dago)?"

What time is it, Matilda? Time for confession, as you know that Dr. Phelps bred those Faverolles. I wonder if Tom Orr is happy. I ain't.

In thinking over Mr. Robinson's plan of club membership, etc., and to build up a new or modify the old association, I have arrived at the conclusion that the same "lobsters" that have been and are running the A. P. A. now, would be in the saddle then.

Why? Answer seems unnecessary.

Because they are hustlers, have the good of the fancy at heart, are progressive and indefatigable workers, and last, but not least, they are a sort of politicians.

Peace loving, modest men, that are all theory, don't melt much ice.

In the mad rush for a first at St. Louey, what "honest" man will put down a rival as breeder?

How many exhibitors will put West Point down as breeder and vice versa?

The good old Quaker said to his son, "John, thee must win prizes, honestly if thee can—but win prizes."

Poultry Success has a half-tone of a sure winner. I imagine by its head it is a White Wyandotte, but the tother end looks as if it brought up the rear end of General Kuropatkin's army and stood the brunt of the Japs' artillery.

Hunter to leave the Reliable, too! Gee whiz, Grant, what does it all mean. Hunter is another lobster who is too good to join the A. P. A.

Joined hands with the A. P. A. In other words, the American Poultry Advocate. Say, A. F., are you a life member or a yearly one of this A. P. A.?

Sept. 43, 04.
Mr. West Point, Lobsterville:
Dear Sir: If you do not stop climbing up my collar I will send in my resignation as chief critic of the A. P. A. It's Rankin in my bosom so much that I may have to take another trip to the old maids. Otherwise, I will score you as a lobster by the D. S. C., as patented by one I. K. Felch, and upheld by six sardines, of whom J. H. Dreverstedt was chief, who remarked in that sweet bass voice of his that "all coons look alike." I will put the A. P. A. out of business and start a God-fearing, chicken-hating association that I have in my fertile brain, so help me Bunker Hill.

Yours for peace,
JAS. HENRY ROUNDABOUT.

Oh, Matilda, send for the ambulance at once. I am going to faint next week.

Say, Drev., why did you leave out the best tarts I wrote last week?

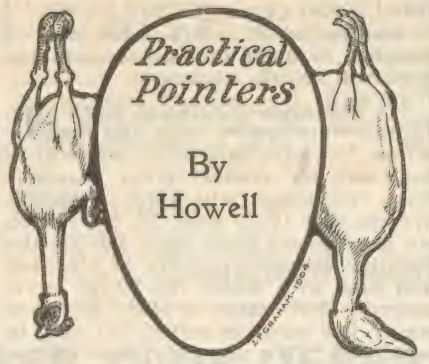
Mr. Curtis—

I notice that you have lost two stars. Now I am looking for a new paper to write for. Mr. D. is all right, but my contract with him expires at death and not wishing to be walking the streets looking for a job, I beseech you, my dear sir, to take me under your wing. My only reason for changing berths is that Drev. is getting so confounded "perticler" that he cuts out half my stuff. Unless he "falls asleep at the switch" again, my fun is over.

Yours lobsterly,
WEST POINT.

P. S.—Kindly keep this confidential, as Hewes may hear I am going to change, and he would want me to go.

PRESIDENT ORR AT DENVER.



Editor American Fancier:—Owing to a railroad accident that resulted in the death of a brother-in-law, I was recently called to Denver, Colo.

I had very little time to look around, but did manage to see a few fanciers and heard a few things that both amused and provoked me. Mr. Coggershall, who is manager of the Western Poultry World, was hunted up,and we had several interesting talks and a bang-up dinner of mountain trout. Would like to say to fanciers intending a visit to Denver, be sure and look up Mr. C. if you want to be royally treated. My time was very limited, but I saw a few birds and a few fanciers. I know, Mr. Editor, this will please you. I spoke to several about score cards, two-thirds of whom said they would sell by the card but would not buy by it. That has been ringing in my head ever since. But I do not blame them. Anther thing is that the breeders in the east have put it up their backs shamefully. I visited one place where they breed White Wyandottes and really it was a shame. He got his start from a noted breeder in the east and paid a good price, and remarked to me that he would never buy another cent's worth from Mr. ————. Really, I cannot understand why breeders will be so short sighted. Of course there is a difference in opinion as to the birds' value, but my creed is: "If birds are not satisfactory send them back and money refunded less express charges."

No reliable breeder ought to want a customer to keep a bird that does not suit. They are getting right up to scratch and I advised them not to buy unless they reserved the right to return. Mr. C. hinted that Denver would like the A. P. A. 1906, and from what I could learn we would be better treated there than at any place we have ever met during my membership. I told them to go ahead and get a hustle on, sail right in, get all the votes they could lay their hands on. Really I would like another trip out there under different circumstances. And here is to Denver, 1906, although I am not pledged. Yours truly,

D. LINCOLN ORR.

We quote live fowls 14c.; chicks, Northern and Western, 15c.; Southern, 14c.; turkeys, 13c per lb.; ducks, 60 to 75c. per pair for best; geese, $1 to $1.25 per pair; pigeons, 20c. per pair; dressed spring turkeys, hens, 3 to 4 lbs., 35c.; toms, 5 to 6 lbs., 25 to 30c.; old turkeys, 13 to 15c.; spring chickens, State and Pennsylvania, 4 to 5 lbs. to pair, 15 to 17c.; small, 13 to 14c.; western, large, dry picked, fancy, 14½; small, 13 to 14c.; Ohio and Michigan, fancy, large, scalded, 15c.; fowls, 14c.; ducks, L. Why the ranks of poultry keepers is constantly increasing is an easy question to answer. People embark in the poultry business either to make money or spend money. Of the latter proposition there is little to be said; it is merely a matter of putting so much of Uncle Sam's goods in circulation in exchange for a bunch of feathers and a few pounds of meat, but when you speak of making it a matter of business, as in the first proposition, it takes on a serious aspect.

One hundred dollars invested in any mercantile venture is done so with the expectation of reaping a certain per cent. of profit; nothing is left undone or overlooked that will increase the percentage of profits. The man who invests one hundred dollars in fowls, and after throwing out a couple of bushels of grain and a bundle of straw, goes under the shade of a tree and dreams about his profits is going to have more dreams than profits.

An investor sets up a sawmill on a woodlot, but in doing so he never fails to include an oil can and a file among his supplies, the one that his machinery may run smoothly, and the other that he may accomplish as much as possible and run his plant at topmost capacity.

It is by strict attention to details that the poultryman can hope to realize the big profits on his venture.

There are many more essentials following the mere purchase of a plant and throwing out the grain that must be provided for, before the profits put in an appearance. A little experience in adjusting the amount and variety of food rations, a study of the habits and fancies of the flock will be needed, and, lastly, a look at the markets and what varieties are best adapted to them, and the existing climatic conditions will be as necessary as the oil can and the file to the miller.

Why is it that a chicken fancier is able to give so little practical experience—and that little is just none at all? When it comes to puffing up a new breed, or writing up a new advertisement after a season's show campaign, they are all there with the goods, and such fervid eloquence as would outdo the immortal Henry Ward Beecher. Just let some other of the brethren call them a liar in a roundabout way and see the ink fly.

But when it comes to writing about the everyday workings of their plant, from which some one may get a lot of useful information, they are as dumb as the proverbial oyster, content to let some space-jammer envelop the press with long and tiresome accounts of "the history and development of that much neglected and worthy breed, the," etc., articles which few read and that the few regret reading afterwards.

Think of the miles of columns of such stuff that has emanated from the pen of that noble Roman down Rhode Island way! I hold that a half column of the every day happenings at a live poultry farm is worth a barrel of such material. And there are a lot of other hot-air dispensaries scattered about the country.

Still—it may be best not to have things too fervent. A certain western journal got busy on the practical side of poultry life to while away the summer days, but now that fall and show time is approaching, he desires to turn off the ink-motor attached to the practical machine, but the wires are down, and fearing contact with the deadly third rail, is obliged to keep his place in the engineer's box and let the darn thing run until it expends its energy.

A Pennsylvania subscriber of the A. F., having some spring chicks to sell, arranged a market for them, dressed them perfectly, shipped at agreed time and received an account of sales and a check at a rattling good price within twenty-four hours from the time they reached their destination. That's what I call hustling.

Not everyone can dress a pair of chickens in the most approved style, but a little practice will help a lot. Only the most attractive in appearance will bring the highest prices where exposed for sale.

NATIONAL SINGLE COMB BUFF ORPINGTON CLUB.

In order to further the interest and increase the demand of the Single Comb Buff Orpingtons, a number of Indiana, Michigan and Ohio breeders have formed a club which shall be known as the National Single Comb Buff Orpington Club. The first meeting was called at Goshen, Ind., on Aug. 10th, and the following officers were elected for the coming year: Dr. E. P. Cunningham, president; Will H. Schadt, secretary and treasurer. A committee was appointed on constitution and by-laws, also honorary vice presidents for the above three states.

The next annual meeting, also the shows at which the club will offer specials, will be announced later. The club standard will be the same as adopted by the American Poultry Association and all judging will be done under the new Standard. The membership fee is $1.00 and annual dues $1.00, but as a special inducement to new members they will include both for $1.00 for a short time. All breeders of Single Comb Buff Orpingtons are cordially invited to join and become identified with the leading Single Comb Buff Orpington Breeders of America. Send for application slips to-day to the secretary, Will H.Schadt, Goshen, Ind.

Sole Owner and Manufacturer of the

MODEL INCUBATORS AND BROODERS

I am the owner of the above Trade Mark, and if it is on the incubator or brooder you purchase it is a guarantee that you are getting the latest development of my skill and experience, and also a better machine than I have ever built before. They are not the "Cyphers" by name, though I invented and formerly manufactured that machine. Please remember my new machine is the "Model." Note the new testimonials each month, which will prove to you that the new machine is doing better work than the old.

Harrisburg, Pa., July 26, 1904.

Dear Sir: The Model positively cannot be beat for hatching. I have run them beside your old company Cyphers machines, and would average 10-15 per cent more with the Model. A neighbor who never saw an incubator before has made some 90 per cent hatches, and has been very successful with the Model brooders. We put 85 chicks in a Model brooder, and raised 83 of them. It is simply perfect. Yours truly, W. A. Stopfel.

WASHING WHITE FOWLS.

To exhibit successfully, white fowls must be clean—white. Brassy or creamy fowls cannot be washed white. One must breed them white. Bred white, then it only remains to present them clean.

Given good conditioned fowls, soft water, good soap and convenient surroundings, all else is easily done—as a matter of fact, we can wash several in the time taken to mention how. Most failures to present clean white fowls are attributable to failure to remove entirely the soap used in scouring. We are careful to do this. With an assistant we submerge in water quite as hot as one would tolerate in a hot bath, being careful to keep the fowl's head above water, holding fowl in this position until soaked to the skin. Stand fowl upon his feet, with tub near full. Begin with the head, beak, comb, lobe and wattles, using soft sponge. Be liberal with use of soap. Rub feathers with fingers, being certain to remove all stains, dirt, etc. After thoroughly lathering, cleaning head, neck, hackle and breast, turn fowl with back to you. Take each section in turn, outside of wings. Then, with fowl in the hands of an assistant, turn on side, turn back wings, cleaning under sides, thigh, shank. Reverse for other side. You have fowl ready to finish; that is, to rinse. In fact, the balance of the task is to remove the soap and, incidentally, the dirt with it. We sponge off as much lather as can be quickly done. Then rinse well in a tub, previously at hand and ready, half filled with water quite as warm as the scrub tub. Go through the same rubbing as before, but using no soap, seeking only to remove all soap that has been so liberally used in the scrub tub. We continue the rinsing to another tub, where the temperature of the water is not so warm, being what is called "lukewarm." In this tub move the fowl backward and forward, the fowl in a position that would be upon its side if upon the ground, to loosen small feathers and fluff. From this to the finish, another tub with cold water, not actually cold, but practically so. In the winter, with low outside temperature, this cold water should have the chill taken off. Here is where bluing is used and for the same purpose that the tidy housewife makes use of bluing that the fabrics may be white. Use judgment in deepness of color of the bluing.

We plunge the fowl, including head, removink quickly, repeating and moving fowl back and forth to float feathers and fluff. Assistant stands ready with clean towels to enwrap the fowl, gently patting to absorb as much as possible the water. We must avoid chilling the bird. As a counteractant we give from three to five homeopathic aconite pellets, and at once remove to adjoining room, where drying coops are placed, scrupulously clean. This room has previously been heated to a temperature of 90 to 92 degrees. Coops have, say, three inches of cut straw about four to six inches long. Heat is maintained at above temperature until the hackle, wings and body feathers appear to be generally dry, when we allow the temperature in cold weather to run down to 70 or 75 degrees by following morning, reducing this the following day lower, endeavoring to harden prior to shipment. We wish to wash not less than, say, four days before shipping. Then, two days after removal from drying room, it is well, if you can do so, to place the fowl in a well cleaned pen, with the floor absolutely clean and a good depth of straw, that the fowl may oil and arrange its feathers. Much attention must be given to the shanks and feet, having prior to washing used vaseline or sweet oil (olive oil) to soften and remove any scale. After washing, rub shanks well with olive oil and alcohol, equal quantities, and be careful to see that no oil is left on the shanks, keeping in mind that grease of any kind will soil the plumage.

We find success depends much upon character of water, soap and manipulation. We have laid much stress upon soap and its removal from plumage. Soap remaining will tinge plumage. We use only Ivory soap, for the reason we have found none other having the peculiar essential quality of cleaning and ease with which the lather is removed. Soft water is best. If hard water, use borax to soften, but only in scrub tub. We use only pure indigo, in the old-fashioned indigo bag. Avoid oil lamps and soft-coal stoves in drying room for reason of soot.

Our arrangements are suited to washing a number. They can be modified to meet the needs and suit surroundings.

With all this routine, which we do not know how to lessen to exhibit clean white fowls, with the ever-needed assistant, we wash from four to six an hour. Formerly we used only three tubs—scrub, rinse and finish (bluing, etc.) During the past two seasons we used four tubs—scrub, rinse, rinse and plunge (finish).

PIEDMONT POULTRY SHOW.

At Lexington, N. C., Nov. 22-25, 1904, the second annual exhibition of the Piedmont Poultry Asociation will be held. This association has the largest number of fanciers as members of any association in the state, and they are all united and working like beavers for their show. While other show managers are trying to keep their members in line the Piedmont marches straight ahead, making arrangements for the largest show to be held in the Tar Heel state this year. The secretary is R. L. Simmons, who knows how to run a show, and the other officers are all experienced in the business. We will have more to say about this show later. The catalogue is now being gotten up and will be an attractive one. Write Secretary Simmons for other information.

HAGERSTOWN HONORS ARE BREAD WINNERS!

LEST WE FORGET: THE GREAT HAGERSTOWN FAIR TAKES PLACE

OCT. 11-12-13-14, '04.

The poultry buildings are the largest in the United States.
The cash prizes are the most liberal offered.
A prize won at Hagerstown is equivalent to one received at New York, Boston, Chicago, or any other great winter show.
It takes good birds to win at Hagerstown for the competion is not local—it is national.
It is a fanciers' show from end to end. Visiting fanciers are "at home" at all times.
The annual parade and banquet are the great features that bring "the clans."
Honors won are bread winners. They sell the stock.
Seven men judge the show, viz: G. O. Brown, J. H. Drevenstedt, D. A. Nichols, F. B. Zimmer, J. F. Craugle, Theodore Hewes and W. J Stanton.
These men have judged before.
Premium lists will be ready August 1st.
The money you win is ready before you go.

If there is anything else you desire to know write to

JOHN L. COST, Mgr., Hagerstown, Md.

GEYER'S SCURVY CURE FOR POULTRY was the first article introduced to the public for this purpose, which has been thoroughly tested in the last ten years by many of our brother fanciers who are willing to say with us that there is no other article on the market like this that can be relied on to do its work properly. It is something that the poultry fancier, who appreciates his fine birds, needs very much. What looks more disgraceful than a fine flock of chickens, many, or all of them, having their legs coated with a thick, hard, scabby crust which is called scurvy? It spoils the appearance of the birds and is very annoying to them. It is also contagious. Here we have a sure cure for this ugly disease. By following the directions we guarantee that it will take off that ugly, hard coat and leave the legs clean and smooth and give them their natural color. It also has no equal for healing sores and frosted combs and wattels. It makes them very bright and red. It is just what the exhibitor wants to prepare his birds for the exhibition room. Some of our customers tell us that they have tried it with good results for weak legs. We only ask you to give it a trial. It is put up in tin boxes. Money must accompany all orders. Price, 25 cents. Address, G. A. Gever, Florin. Pa. 560tf

MONEY MADE

By Using Geyer's Champion Disinfectant & Vermin Destroyer

There are, in all classes of powders before the public, many calculated for the sure cure of lice and vermin and a dozen other purposes, yet are they reliable, and have they produced the results claimed?

In offering this compound, we offer a powder such as is not before the public, and fills a place that none other can for the purpose intended—a positive, sure disinfectant and destroyer of all vermin that invests either poultry, small animals, those of the barn yard.

It is a perfect destroyer of all disease germs, and produces a healthy odor wherever distributed. It is a sure cure for gapes, in young chicks.

If you are skeptical and don't believe in Powders or compouud because of many worthless ones on the market, we ask, please cast aside your prejudice and give this compound a trial. It is put up in 2 pound boxes. Price 25c. 560tf

TORONTO.

Grand Display of Poultry at Canada's Great Exposition.

The poultry display at Canada's great Exposition, held in the beautiful park and fair grounds of Toronto, September 3 to 10, was exceedingly fine in quality and fully up in quantity when compared with other years.

The management of the poultry department was entrusted to Dr. A. W. Bell, and we will state right here that it was a treat to all. It was a model show, conducted in the most approved up-to-date manner.

We should like to see American shows conducted on the same principle right straight through.

At eight o'clock in the morning, Saturday, September 3, all judges were on hand and a few minutes later were at work on the different classes assigned to them, each judge being furnished with a clerk and a stand to rest the judges' book on. The building was closed, no exhibitor, no matter how old and prominent, being allowed in the building.

This made judging a very pleasant task, and especially so when it is taken into consideration that the class of entire class was perfect, the cages large and the light excellent.

An envelope with a number was on each coop, which corresponded with the number in the judge's books who had the class. A set of handsomely printed premium cards filled out with the name of each variety, the sex (old or young) were in the clerk's hands. As fast as the awards were made, the clerk placed these cards in the wire holder provided for same on each coop. As soon as the judge got through judging a class, the envelope was removed and a card was found on each coop giving the name and address of each exhibitor.

At one o'clock the judging was completed and the building thrown open to the public. Every card was in place and no visitor or exhibitor was in doubt who won the prizes or to whom the birds belonged.

The judges who placed the awards were: Sharp Butterfield, (Ornamental Bantams and Asiatics), Richard Oke (Games and Game Bantams), L. G. Jarvis and Mr. Smelt (Hamburghs, Polish, etc.), J. Bennett, (Plymouth Rocks), George H. Burgott (Leghorns), W. H. Northup (Minorcas, Andalusians and Spanish) and J. H. Drevenstedt (Wyandottes and Javas). We are indebted to Bro. The above list explains itself, but a few words regarding the paucity of the Cochin entries will explain the cause. Dr. Bell being superintendent, did not consider it proper to make entries in the Buff and Partridge Cochin classes, and as he has always sent big strings in the past, the hole left by their absence was marked. The quality of the Asiatic classes, however, was high, as might be expected, a number of the noted breeders in Canada showing.

The Plymouth Rock classes brought out some very fine birds, notably in the Buffs, but we would like to see a larger string of Barred Rocks exhibited. Why some of our American exhibitors fail to send Barred Rocks to Toronto is a mystery. There is no better place to show good birds and good sales would result if first class birds are sent across the border. We are aware that quite a few American birds would have been sent to Toronto from New York state had not the dates of the State Fair at Syracuse clashed with those at Toronto.

The Wyandottes were a grand lot. Beginning with the Silvers, little fault can be found with the winners, the type and clean, strong, open lacing being pronounced. It was the strongest collective exhibit of Silvers we have seen in a very long time.

Goldens, small but very superior classes.

Buffs, a grand lot, notably first cock, hen and first, second and third pullets. The third pullet with more age should develop into a very strong bird for the showroom, being very near even in surface color and of proper shade, the first and second were rich in color, sound in wings and tail and well shown.

Blacks and Partridge Wyandottes, excellent in quality, notably first Partridge hen, a beautifully pencilled bird in every section and splendid in color and type. The White Wyandottes were the largest classes in the show and showed quality for the time of year seldom if ever seen. The old cocks, while somewhat backward in moult, showed quality of the highest among the winners with chances that the second and third birds will crowd the first when full furnished. Hens a grand lot, the winners being of one type and that the true Wyandotte. Color of plumage fine, legs and beak yellow, neat combs.

The cockerels were a strong lot, the winner being an early bird of fine type, second smaller and younger, but liable to beat the first in a month or two. Among the unplaced cockerels was a youngster that has the earmarks of a grand one and we believe the owner, Mr. Martin, is fully alive to the fact.

The pullets were the stars of the collection, first and second being splendidly shown, white as snow, clean yellow legs and beak, beautiful heads and fine combs. They were a treat to look at, and there were scores of others brimful of quality. It was one of the nicest classes of white Wyandottes we have ever handled at an early show.

Javas not numerous, but good in quality.

Silver Pencilled Wyandottes had to compete with the Partridge variety, only two specimens being shown. There is a good opportunity for some Silver Pencilled Wyandotte breeders to make a hit showing these birds, for they are destined to become popular in Canada.

Of the Leghorns, Mr. Burgott writes as follows:

S. C. White Leghorns—1st cock a fine, shapely bird, moulting and not in condition, but a winner; 2nd a fine bird, but also in moult, a very good class for the season.

Hens, not a strong class. 1st hen an easy winner, balance good specimens.

Cockerels, 1st would be in better condition a week later, but wins in his class; 2nd not quite as typical, but a good bird.

Pullets, a fine class. 1st wins over second on account of strong color in legs and beak; 2nd has best comb; balance of class good.

S. C. Brown Leghorns. 1st cock a good one, but a trifle too light in neck and back; 2nd good colored bird out of condition; a fair class.

Hens. Only 3 choice hens shown; 1st had moulted well and won; 2nd a good colored hen with poor legs. The 3rd hen no doubt would win over 1st and second after moult, but had a rusty old coat of feathers.

Pullets. In pullets we found the gem of Leghorn Alley, easy to win, but not easy to breed. Look out for her. Balance of class good, best for from the 1st pullet.

R. C. White Leghorns, a good size class, old birds not in the best of condition. 1st cockerel and pullet both very fine birds, and easy winners.

R. C. Browns. Cocks 1st and 2nd good representative specimens of good color. Hens not of the proper color. Cockerels well developed for the season. 1st and 2nd good birds.

Pullets. This clas also weak.

S. C. Buff Leghorns. A small class but of good quality. The 1st hen must be especially spoken of. She is a very fine one and is the best in the Buffs.

I wish to say a few words in regard to the Toronto Industrial Poultry Dept. Too much praise can not be given Dr. Bell for the careful management of this department. This congenial, conservative gentleman had such precise order, regularity in every detail that our American brothers have a right to envy the Canadian breeders for having such a qualified superintendent. It is a pleasure to judge under such regularity. I personally wish to congratulate Dr. Bell, and also say to my Canadian brother fanciers that I sincerely regretted not being able to remain with them a day or two.

G. H. BURGOTT.

Judge Northup favors us with the following comments on Minorcas:

The Black Minorca class was large, and composed of birds of extraordinary merit. Never, except at Black Minorca Club meetings, have I handled a Black Minorca exhibit which was the equal of this. I only remember two birds in the whole class which would not have been creditable as 1st prize winners, but each winner deserved its place and competition was so strong that excellent birds had to take the lower places and some fine ones went without an award.

Too much cannot be said in favor of the 1st and 2nd cocks. Both were fine large birds, excellent in every way, and the difference in condition of plumage at time of showing was the main point which decided the winning. The 3rd, 4th and 5th cocks were also fine large birds.

The 1st hen was extraordinary, a fine large bird with fine comb and lobes and almost perfect color of plumage throughout. If she could go into the Universal exposition at St. Louis in the same condition she is now, I would expect her to make her mark there, but she will probably give others her chance by going out of show condition in moult. 2nd hen was a fine large bird and there was much difficulty in judging between her and the 3rd hen, they were so nearly matched. Both were fine large specimens.

There was a big display of cockerels. All the winners were fine, large birds, but some which lost for lack of age are likely to surpass some of the winners later. The 1st cockerel was a fine large fellow, strong and vigorous, capable of making a 10 lb. cock. He had as near perfect colored plumage as I ever saw on a cockerel of his age, fine comb and was a well shaped bird throughout. He came near losing his position by reason of poor lobes. The 2nd cockerel was evidently a brother of the 1st, also a grand bird.

The 1st pullet was a very early hatched chick, comb out, and nearly ready to lay. She had excellent color of plumage and showed much better than the others in the class on account of her age. I expect many of them can win over her four months hence. The 2nd prize pullet gave promise to make a sure winner in the winter shows.

There were two pairs of Rose Comb Blacks, but they were shown in the Single Comb class, where they could not win, being another variety. One of the hens was as fine a specimen as there was in the Single Comb class, had she been in as good condition.

There was a small class of White Minorcas, but of the very finest quality. In shape, size and color they were equal to the best that I have seen.

There were a few good Black Spanish. The 1st cock was the best I have seen, except that he was in moult and plumage was not at its best.

With Andalusians, Newton Cosh was all alone as an exhibitor and it was well for his competitors that they staid away. I have judged a great many classes of Andalusians and have never seen better specimens than he exhibited.

Notable features of the whole poultry exhibit were cleanliness of the exhibition hall and that exhibitors were well pleased with the excellent care their birds had received while in the show, and spoke with much praise of the work of all the judges.

ORNAMENTAL BANTAMS.

Mr. A. O. Schilling sends us the following regarding Ornamental Ban-

Ornamental Bantams were one of the features of the show and came out strong in numbers and quality. Here could be found prospective winners for the leading fall and winter shows.

Cochins alone had 128 entries, Buffs being the largest class, with Black and Whites next; also a number of good Partridges. The winning Buff cock was a fair bird, but not of the correct shape and too large in comb. Second, much better in shape and carriage, with a nice small comb and very even in color, but faded out, the best bird in class. Third, a rather large one.

Buff hens.—First a good shaped hen, even in color, but not a very good comb. Second, a very even colored hen, good in shape, but lacks on toe-feathering.

Buff cockerels a large class. First, a grand shaped bird and even in color, with good, sound flights. Second, a good one of the proper color and nice broad cushion, but not matured as well as winner.

First and second pullets were two beauties for color and feathering. Blacks were a grand lot and much improvement could be seen over previous years. Cocks were about as strong a class as were ever penned together in one showroom. First cock was a beauty in every way and black to the skin. Second losing a little in shape to winner, also a trifle larger. Third, another good one and pushed the winners closely. Hens were good throughgood shaped bird and good green luster. Second not so good in shape as winner. Third, a fair hen, but in bad feather; may improve after moult. An unplaced hen in coop No. 1,537 should have been in the money. Winning cockerel, a very nice bird for shape and color. Second, close up and will make into a good one in more time.

Pullets.—First, a well feathered bird and good in cushion. Second, another good one and pushed hard for first honors.

White cocks.—First, a good bird for shape and color. Second, a trifle larger, but a good shaped bird; loses on comb. Third, only a fair bird, very poor color.

First hen, a good one in cushion and color; not a very good comb. Second, loses to winner in shape. Third hen should have had at least second. She is a beauty for shape and color.

White cockerels and pullets were of only ordinary quality, but a number of undeveloped ones may turn out better in time.

Partridge C. Bantam cocks.—First, a good all-around bird for this variety and will stand any competition. Second, rather large and bad in breast, long in tail. Third, a fair bird. First and second hens fair birds for this variety. Cockerels and pullets a fair class, but winners will be rather large.

As usual, a nice display of Japanese in nearly every color. Among the most notable were the winning white cock and black cock. The winning white Japanese cockerel is the most promising youngster I ever saw and will surely be a wonder when fully developed.

White and Black Africans were exceptionally good in quality. Among the most notable were the winning black cock and hen. These have the proper tails and combs.

Seabrights were also well represented and contained a number of good ones. An unplaced cockerel in coop 1,674 was by far the cream of his class, as he was a well laced bird and had good ground color and well developed.

White booted and White Polish, while not large in numbers, were good in quality. The winning white booted cock was about the best of this variety going to-day. The A. O. V. class was also a very interesting class and contained some good specimens of L. Brahma, Booted Bantams, Dominique Cochins, and last, but not least, a very fair B. B. R. frizzle cock. The three winning males were good specimens of their respective varieties.

A. O. SCHILLING.

The Polish and Hamburgs, as usual were features, with such past masters as "Billy" McNeil, "Dick" Oke and Allen Bogue among the exhibitors. We were particularly stuck on some Silver Spangled Hamburg chicks shown by the "only Billy." It was whispered they came across the seas and they certainly had the "points" Hamburg fanciers like so well. Small, but good classes of Houdans La Fleche.

Dr. Phelps sent over some fine Salmon Faverolles and Lakenvelders.

Orpingtons not as strong as we expected, but quality first class.

The ornamental varieties were well taken care of, quality being good in every instance. The old veteran, C. J. Daniels, had a fine display of Chas. A. Cyphers' Model incubators and brooders, besides a lot of other poultry fixings. Daniels looks as young as ever and has lost none of his good nature.

We are also indebted to Mr. Victor Barber for numerous courtesies shown us in the pigeon department, the latter being managed in first class style, with plenty of quality to face the judges.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1904.

We have just received the following from Col. Mills, chief of Live Stock Stock Department, World's Fair, St. Louis:

St. Louis, U. S. A., Sept. 16, 1904.
Editor American Fancier:

The names of the following judges have been presented to the Exposition to officiate at the World's Fair Poultry Show, October 24-November 5, 1904, and it is expected that these nominations will be confirmed: Philander Williams, Taunton, Mass.; F. J. Marshall, Atlanta, Ga.; Sharpe Butterfield, Windsor, Ontario; Thomas F. Rigg, Iowa Falls, Iowa; Charles F. Rhodes, Topeka, Kas.; Henry Berrar, San Jose, Cal.; Charles T. Cornman, Carlisle, Pa.; George Burgott, Lawton Station, N. Y.; Charles McClave, New London, Ohio; W. R. Graves, Springfield, Mass.; W. C. Denny, Rochester, N. Y.; Geo. D. Holden, Owatowna, Minn.; M. F. Delano, Millville, N. J.; C. A. Emry, Carthage, Mo.; James Tucker, Concord, Mich.; Eugene Sites, Elyria, Ohio; D. I. Heimlich, Jacksonville, Ill.; W. S. Russell, Ottumwa, Iowa; S. B. Johnston, Fairland, Ind.; F. H. Shellabarger, West Liberty, Iowa.

Very truly yours,
COL. CHARLES F. MILLS,
Chief of Department of Live Stock.

As there were some two hundred names submitted to Col. Mills, the above selection is the result. Before we proceed to make any comments, we desire to have it plainly and most emphatically placed before the American fanciers, that what we say is in no way biased, influenced or controlled by the action taken by the Live Stock Commission, its subordinates, co-ordinates or powers that be.

To start with, we believe the announcement of judges at St. Louis, after entries closed, a mistake. It shows a lack of human discernment as to the real etiquette that governs the selection of judges at shows, poultry or otherwise. It places a stigma on the innocent, and implies a lack of faith on the part of the promoters of an exhibition.

The American Fancier has published everything of interest regarding the poultry show at St. Louis and has done so in order to show its good will and not to in any way injure the entries. The latter have closed, so we are free to express our opinions.

These entries amount to eight thousand and one-tenth are White Wyandottes. That is gratifying to lovers of that breed, and as we like them we can say amen and congratulate the men that brought about this great entry. And there are other big entries, notably Buff and Barred Rocks, all worked up in good hustling style. By referring to Col. Mills' letter in this issue regarding these immense entries in popular varieties and at the same time glancing over a letter on another page, received from that good old fancier, the octogenarian, Henry Hales, member of the American Poultry Association, the drift of our criticism will be apparent. Mr. Hales further writes us: "I send a little criticism on the World's Fair prize list. I never intend to enter Dorkings a second breed, so could not exhibit. There are other points I did not touch on that are quite inconsistent with fairness."

If the World's Fair Live Stock Department had heeded the advice of such men as Henry Hales, a gathering of all Standard breeds, such as the world had never known, would have been the result. The popular varieties, thanks to the specialty clubs and other influences, got there with both feet. But what became of the Orpington Club specials?

Now as to the list of judges. The men named are supposed to be representative of the entire fancy of the United States and Canada and are supposed to have been selected with due regard to geographical and state location. The list will cause surprise to many, not in the inner circle. It is no surprise to those who knew the condition imposed on men who expected to judge at St. Louis.

We have no desire to cast any reflection on any man selected to judge at St. Louis. There are many good men on that list. If they were willing to sign the agreement as called for, it is their business. But it is the business of th e American Fancier to place before its readers a few facts.

Why are men placed on this list who are unknown to the best breeders of America? Why were the Ornamental Bantam breeders ignored in the selection of judges, and there were good names sent in? And where is New England, the great nestor of the American poultry fancy? True, it is represented by that fine old gentleman and great fancier, Philander Williams, for which we are thankful, and no doubt the other gentleman selected is a capable fancier and judge, but until now unknown to fame. What has become of many of the best judges in New England? Canada has its Butterfield on the list, but where are his associates, as Canada has large entries? Suffice it to say , the American Fancier regrets most sincerely the lack of appreciation shown toward some of the real fanciers of America, and extends to all exhibitors at St. Louis, the wish that they will find glory and success in the face of obstacles.

We regret that the announcement of Dr. C. J. Andruss' appointment as judge of Minorcas, which appeared in our issue of September 10, was incorrect. We were informed at Rochester that a notice had appeared in one of the papers announcing the doctor's appointment. We also regret not to find his name among the judges in the official list appearing on this page.

* * *

Mr. James Glasgow, son of the lamented and much missed John Glasgow, made his debut as a judge at Poughkeepsie last week, and his work indicates ability out of the ordinary. "Jimmy" is careful and conscientious to a limit. We congratulate him.

Rosy in face as a peach, immaculately groomed, with the same old winsome smile, Doctor B. C. Thornton, the erstwhile King of Game Bantams, made his thirty-third appearance on earth at Poughkeepsie last week. And the doctor had just a few birds "up his sleeve" to show. As the veteran "Billy" Oliver remarked: "When 'Old Ben' shows where are the rest of us at?" B. C. Thornton has been a master of the art of showing Game Bantams for the past twenty years, and exercises a hypnotic influence over even a second rater that makes him a winner. Many of the best birds lose owing to lack of judgment on the part of their owners in preparing them for the battle; many a bird in the hands of Thornton has won, because he was conditioned, cocked and primed for the fray. Doctor Thornton is now at Oscar's Fanciers' Farm, New Paltz, New York.

Combination judging is becoming popular. (?) One judge exhibits in one class and another judge puts up the ribbons; then the scene shifts and the latter exhibits in another class which the former judges. A similar game was played some years ago in the White Wyandotte alley at several of the biggest shows in the East. A showed at ———, where B. judged; B showed at ———, where A judged. Same birds at both places. Last winter at New York a first prize cock in one of the classes was sold by the judge to the exhibitor prior to the show. But what are we going to do about it? If the specialty clubs fail to take action in matters of this kind they should quit existence.

The Newark, N. J., show will be held the first week in February, 1905. The outlook is very promising and some new features will be introduced about which we will have more to say later on.

THE WORLD'S FAIR PRIZE LIST.

Editor American Fancier:

After long expectation of showing my birds at the World's Fair, St.Louis, I was greatly disappointed at seeing the prize list, with its A. B. C. arrangement; in plainer English, 1st, 2d and 3d classes. In our American standard all the birds admitted stand on one level. Why should any committee that we should expect to be fanciers take upon themselves to introduce rules so un-American, especially at a universal World's Fair? Most American fanciers know their A. B. C.'s and many are dismayed at such an arrangement at the World's Fair, open to the world. In what reason certain varieties are singled out for A or No. 1, I cannot understand. On page 8, out of 35 named varieties or breeds of fowls, only one is classed A for the peaceful visitors to ponder over. They are Pit Games, fighting fowls. On page 9 the class A, for which the first prize is ten dollars, there are three varieties of Plymouth Rocks, three varieties of Wyandottes, two of Langshans, one Light Brahma, two of Leghorns and three of Capons. To make the list more complicated, we have some fowls classed as A in one list, and B in another. Silver Gray Dorkings are A in page 8, and B in page 9. White and Colored are relegated to class B, with many others of our finest and handsomest breeds of poultry. This discrimination is most singular, when we consider the many varieties left out of Class A, for instance, the Dorkings, white and colored. Why are not all the Dorkings in class A, or No. 1? It seems very strange, since they are well known to be one of the earliest and most beautiful breeds that have held their own for centuries and are yet not excelled by any other breed. I have not written this to puff up Dorkings, nor to commence a discussion. I only want to see fair play in the show room, and no more A. B. C.'s. One intended exhibitor writes me that after long care and preparation for the St. Louis show, he was so disappointed when he saw the prize list that he gave up showing.

ENTRIES FOR THE POULTRY SHOW OF THE UNIVERSAL EXPOSITION.

Editor American Fancier:

Entries started late and came very slowly until near the time for closing, then they came in such numbers as to overwhelm the clerical force and make it impossible to record them in the order of their arrival. Many entries are yet unclassified, but enough is known to announce that this will be the greatest collection of poultry and pigeons the world has ever seen. The time for closing pigeon entries has been extended to September 25th, but many entries of pigeons are already here and more are arriving daily from all over the country, also entries of some foreign birds.

Of chickens, turkeys, geese and ducks, more than seven thousand have been recorded as entered and the coop fees paid in, and the list now ready ahead of the entry clerks warrants the announcement that the number of these, exclusive of the pigeons, will considerably exceed eight thousand.

So far as entries have been booked, forty-one states, territories and foreign countries are represented. Missouri leads in the number of entries, with nearly one thousand birds, Canada, Illinois and New York following in the order named, and all three competing closely for second place.

Ohio, Indiana, Wisconsin and Pennsylvania constitute the next group of competitors, and they are closely "bunched." New Jersey, Iowa, Massachusetts, California, Michigan, Nebraska, North Carolina and Connecticut follow closely in the order named and the size of their entries may be estimated by the fact that each of these eight states has paid in from $100.00 to $200.00 in coop fees.

Kansas, Arkansas, Kentucky, Minnesota, Texas and Georgia constitute the next group of close competitors. New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Alabama, Indian Territory, Louisiana, West Virginia, Maryland, Oklahoma, Mississippi, Maine, Oregon, South Carolina and Colorado, each make good entries, in the order named as to number.

Unclassified entries are still before the entry clerks and it is hoped that among them may be found entries from Vermont, Delaware, Virginia, Florida, the Dakotas, Washington, Montana, Nevada, Utah, Arizona and New Mexico. This would complete our list of states, but let it be remembered that this is a World's Fair show, that birds are entered direct from several foreign countries, and that numerous importations have been made to show here.

It is a source of much satisfaction to this department to note that this will be emphatically a show of the practical and useful varieties. It is regretted that there are not still larger entries in some of the fancier varieties of games, polish, turkeys, geese and ducks. Some of the lower prizes in these may not be claimed, a condition that may be attributed to the apathy of the fanciers and specialty clubs of those varieties. But the progressive fanciers in these lines who are entering birds from remote points will simply win their larger prizes the easier.

The entries in the leading varieties are simply astounding and the poultry public will have an opportunity here to study these useful and beautiful varieties on a scale never before seen. In the battle of the breeds which will be waged here in October and November, thirteen hundred Plymouth Rocks and more than one thousand Leghorns. Besides these three classes, there will be more than eight hundred Asiatics and enough Orpingtons, Minorcas and Rhode Island Reds to make the show of the American, Mediterranean, Asiatic and English classes alone exceed six thousand birds.

In the variety contests the White Wyandottes are far in the lead. Buff Plymouth Rocks, White Plymouth Rocks, Single Comb White Leghorns, Barred Plymouth Rocks, Single Comb Brown Leghorns, Silver Wyandottes, Light Brahmas, Buff Wyandottes, Single Comb Black Minorcas, Single Comb Black Minorcas, Single Comb Buff Orpingtons, Golden Wyandottes, Partridge Wyandottes, Single Comb Buff Leghorns, Rose Comb White Leghorns and Buff Cochins following in the order named, these sixteen varieties entering from one hundred to eight hundred birds each.

The Wyandottes come from twenty-nine different states, ranging from New Hampshire to Texas, and some from across the seas. The Plymouth Rocks are from Twenty-four states, from Massachusetts to California, from Canada to Texas. The Leghorns are from twenty-four states, the north and south, east and west being all represented. California makes a big entry of Leghorns. The Rhode Island Reds are no longer limited to the state of their origin; they are entered from twelve different states. In Bronze Turkeys eight different states are in competition. In Pekin Ducks seven; and in Toulouse Geese six.

Now let all who have entered remember that it will be well worth their trouble and expense to have their birds here and catalogued even though they do not win a prize.

The cooping committee announce that they have arranged for a supply of new coops and that they will be able to furnish the best of service and care to all exhibitors.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES F. MILLS,

Chief of Department of Live Stock.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

September 6-10.

The poultry department at the New York State Fair presented such a clean, bright look that many of the old-time fanciers were not only surprised, but delighted as well. The handsome new Empire coops showed off the birds to great advantage and the system of having closed fronts worked well. There was no handling of birds in the aisles. The building itself, while large, needs more top-light, and Supt. Jacquins assures us that this will be provided for another year. He also thought an addition will be built so as to accommodate the increased entries. In fact, it is proposed to make it a single-bird-in-a-coop show and that is what the Empire state fall show must strive for. It must be a case of lead, let others follow.

The American classes were the largest and unusually well filled in some instances, notably, Barred Rocks, which made a great showing in numbers and quality. Mr. Lamon, who looked these classes over, writes:

BARRED ROCKS.—Cocks (2) good lot of birds in feather; winners rightly placed; several unplaced birds of fine quality. Hens (15) some good birds here; several winners among the lot at other shows unplaced; many of the birds in good feather for this time of year. Cockerels (13). This class contained a lot of young, immature birds. A fine class. Pullets (13). A good class, the best of the lot. Some future winners at our winter shows among the young ladies. Breeding pens, both old and young, contained birds of first class quality. As a whole the Barred Rocks this year the best I ever saw. The best of quality reigned throughout.

BUFF ROCKS.—Cocks, (15) a class of splendid birds, bird after bird of even color, any number unplaced birds fit to show anywhere. Hens (11). Here was another class of good ones. Must have bothered the judge some in making his decisions.

Pullets, cockerels (13). A good lot of birds rather immature yet to see just what they are going to be. As a class not as good as the cocks.

Pullets (13) nice lot of birds, several fit for our best winter shows. I should like to have owned one or two of them.

Pens—of both old and young—contained a lot of nice birds. The exhibit as a whole was the best I ever saw at a fall show, barring size of chicks, many of them fine in quality but too small.

WHITE ROCKS.—Cocks (12) quality extra fine. Pure white birds are the rule. Splendid class. Hens (12) 1st and 2nd grand birds, others close up. Cockerels (7) 1st a grand young bird, white as snow, can't just see how 2nd gets his place, but did not handle him; others a good lot. Pullets (7) the best class outside of the cockerel, any one of them worthy of 1st place. Pens, both old and young, splendid. As a whole the exhibit of White Rocks is a grand one.

HARRY M. LAMON.

WYANDOTES. — Silvers, small classes, first cock and hen being very promising; first pullet, a gem in shape and beautifully and evenly laced. Goldens fair in numbers with a few good ones among the winners. Whites a fine lot, first pen, first and second cock being in class A. The first cockerel was a rather early bird with considerable quality; rest too young. First hen was a beauty, finely shown, first pullet a very typical handsome bird with clean white plumage, good yellow legs and beak, fine head points, second another nice one, but not so good in type.

Buff Wyandottes, one of the best classes seen so early in the year. First and second cocks worthy of the best winter shows. First and second hens buff all over and under, good shape. First cockerel a large early bird fine in surface color, second excellent in color, too young yet for best showing. Pullets a fine lot, first being a clean, buff all over and with more age will give the best of them a hard time to beat her; second large, good shape and color. Pens fine, first and second being close, male in latter being in poor feather, otherwise might have changed places.

Black Wyandottes were good in quality, but some of the birds forgot to get shaved before the judging.

Partridge Wyandottes large classes with plenty of good ones, but the barber was on a vacation in a number of instances and some first class birds were disqualified. First cock and first hen were the "stars." Javas a fine lot.

While there were some good Dominiques, the class as a whole was not very promising.

Rhode Island Reds contained some nice birds and some that were not.

The Asiatic classes were light but contained some fine specimens in Light and Dark Brahmas, Buff and Partridge Cochins, and the best lot of Black Langshans seen on a fall circuit in many years. They were "beauty brights" and no mistake.

Buff Orpingtons, few but good.

Leghorns, except Buffs, Whites and Blacks, not as numerous as we expected. The Single Comb Browns brought out some very good birds among the winners, but the rest of the class was a disappointment. Rose Combs were larger and better as a class, in fact above the average in quality. White Leghorns a fine class, first pen of old and first pen of young being exceedingly good, the cockerel in latter having as fine head points as we have seen on a Leghorn in years. First hen was another dainty, well shown bird, first pullet being in a class by herself, type, plumage and head points taken in consideration. Rose Comb Whites, a good lot. Black Leghorns strong all along the line. Buff Leghorns a banner class all the way through. First pen of old snowed sound color, good type, closely followed by second. First pen of young very even in color, in fact a great and promising pen, albeit quite young. Second, a fine pen of birds, large in size, good in shape, but no so even in color as first. Several promising pens of youngsters left out owing to size. Cocks a fine class; first an easy winner, being fine in shape and very even in surface color, second close up but not in as good feather. Hens, first and second beauties, with several great ones left out,owing to moult and lack of color in legs. Cockerels another fine class, first winning on finish, size, shape and evenness of surface color, second a large, rich colored bird, well shown, a trifle too dark. A smaller bird left out of the awards will make the winner later on. Pullets first and second, a pair of beauties in color, former being an ideal Leghorn in shape as well.

Silver Duckwings very good in quality. Anconas the best lot we have seen in some time.

Black Minorcas a good class, notably first cock, first and second hen, first cockerel and pullet. White Minorcas all to the good in quality, some exceptionally fine birds being shown.

Andalusians quite strong with plenty of quality in the winners. The less said about the Spanish the better. There were a few good hens, that's all.

There were some very good Houdans shown, but we could hardly follow the judge in his awards in several instances.

The Game and Game Bantam exhibits were a big disappointment, as the noted serfings of Blunck and Havemeyer and Glasgow were conspicuous by their absence.

Of the rest Mr. M. F. Delano writes:

The Polish and Hamburg classes contained a good lot right through,and winners were in good condition. Many of the best ones will be at St. Louis, and it will take good birds to down them.

Game and Variety Bantams had some birds fit for any competition. As a rule, the youngsters were somewhat undeveloped, but many of them were extremely promising.

Water Fowls were all full classes and red-hot quality in Toulouse Geese, Pekin, Colored Muscovy, Call and Rouen Ducks particularly. Other classes were all made up of good birds, and rounded out the best quality show of the year to date.

M. F. DELANO.

G. S. BOLLER, Secretary.
S. P. W. Club of America.
Little Valley, N. Y., Sept. 16, 1904.

Mr. Howell, associate editor of The American Fancier, will furnish weekly reports on the egg and poultry market, and answer all questions submitted to him relating to commercial and practical poultry keeping. When replies are requested to be sent by letter, stamps must be enclosed and letters addressed to George E. Howell, 70 Christopher St., New York City.

Receipts for week, 56,055 cases, with a firm market back of them. Receivers have been exceeding quotations on white eggs, resulting in a general cleaning up at a loss of from one to three cents a dozen, loss to be charged up against the experience account.

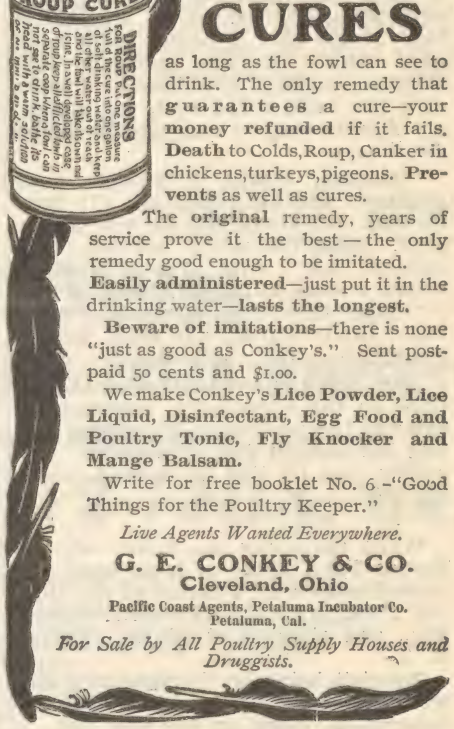
A general disinclination of the egg-eating public to stand for the added price has been discouraging to the grocer, and he positively refused to meet the rise, putting the question up to the jobber; and he, seeing his stock accumulating as the shipper hustled to get all of the good thing he could, gracefully accepted the inevitable.

With receipts liberal, the handling of storage has been confined strictly to private owners. We quote State and nearby fancy selected white, 27 to 28c; fair to good, 25 to 26c.; mixed colors, best, 23 to 24c.; 2nds, 22c.; western selected, fancy candled, 22 to 23c.; average best, 21c.; 2nds, 18 to 18½c.; southerns, 17 to 20c.; dirties, 14 to 17½c.; cracks, 12 to 14c. per dozen.

Poultry.—Receipts, 73 cars live, and 7,642 pkgs. dressed poultry, heavy receipts due to the expected demand for Jewish religious holiday, which occurs to-day, the 19th inst. We quote, nearby and western, 15c per lb. for live chickens; fowls, 14c.; turkeys, 13c per lb; ducks, 60 to 75c. a pair; geese, $1.00 to $1.25 per pair; pigeons, dull at 15c per pair.

Dressed fowls, western dry picked, 13½c.; Ohio and Michigan scalded, 13 to 13¾c.; other western scalded, 13c.; southern, 13c. Chickens, Phila., 5 to 6 lbs. to pair, 21 to 22c.; mixed sizes, 17 to 19c.; Penna. fancy, 5 to 6 lbs. to pair, 17 to 18c.; state and Penna. mixed sizes, 14 to 16c.; small, 13 to 14c. Young turkeys, hens, 28 to 30c.; toms, 25 to 28c.; mixed, 22 to 25c.; old turkeys, dry picked, 13 to 15c. Spring ducks, Long Island and eastern, 16c.; Jersey, Penna. and Va., 15½c.; poor to fair, 13 to 14c. Spring geese, eastern white, 16 to 17c.; dark, 14 to 15c. per lb. Squabs, $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen as to color.

Recent observation of a flock of growing Orpington chicks convinced me they will have to be ranged in the class of Brahmas and Langshans, rather than our Rock and Wyandotte divisions, the greatest models of a perfect utility chicken on this planet or any other.



As I have said before, it is no disgrace for a fancier to breed and champion the Leghorn, Brahma, Orpington or what not, the choice is up to him, and his the opportunity to make good, the claims of the originators of his favorite breed, the fact only remains, our American breeds have proven themselves the world over, the peer of anything yet put in feathers and the greatest feathered exponents of the full dinner pail, and strengthener of the commercial pulse.

I was greatly impressed by the tone and character of an autographic appeal for advertising patronage, recently addressed to our Dairy Department by one of the Western journals.

For a promise of results, extreme liberality, and downright advance of good fellowship, I have seldom read a more touching appeal, and this being a political year, is a great year for touches at that.

When t comes to bordering on the effusive, this western editor is all there. As one of Monk Eastman's New York Bowery friends said in describing a railroad ride through Montana, to his pals—"I like the western ways. They keep their feet agoin' an' there ain't no back pedallin'. Maybe they don't wade so deep into culture as we do out here. Maybe they don't waste so much time varnishin' themselves an' tryin' to make believe they're somethin' they ain't. Us people out East here are refined on the outside, an' the guys out West are shined up on the inside. That's the difference.

"Jus' to show you. On the train goin' through Montana, between Billings and Boozeberg, they was a woman settin' in front o' me that looked as if she'd just recovered from the glad surprise of a bridal tower. She had a kid. A noo kid. It hadn't never been used before. It was mournin' an' weepin' somethin' scandalous. I leans over the back o' the seat, an' tappin' my female countryman on the shoulder, I says:

"'Madam,' I says, 'I accept your apology. It's all right, an' I'll drop the suit; but abbreviate its flow o' raw grief, 'cause I'm gettin' nervous. An' excited. An' wild. I'm forgettin' where I want to fall off."

"'Same here,' she says, 'same here. But I can't help it,' she says, 'honest I can't."

After reading our brother's exhortations on the advertising question, I came to the conclusion his appeal was just the natural flow of western eloquence, and he, like the woman, could not help it.

While spreading the fame of the Spruce Farm brand of fresh eggs up Westchester way, I called at the Gedney Farm, owned by Howard Willets, Esq., and situated at White Plains, N. Y.

My visit being on the spur of a moment and Supt. Gaylor of the poultry department being on the sick list, I made only a casual inspection of the fowls and houses.

When the improvements contemplated and now under way are completed, his will be one of the greatest show places of the country.

Broad driveways lead through the estate and palattial buildings for the accommodation of the stock and fowls are being constructed.

Although handicapped by lack of buildings, the old stock all looks rugged and healthy, and six hundred youngsters were marching in and out of the growing corn, after the fashion of the Russian and Japanese armies. Gazing on the hills beyond the poultry plant could be seen the herd of beautiful Jersey cattle.

Supt. Gaylor is to have the aid of Frank Davey, the poultry sage of Minisink, Orange county, N. Y. When two such slick articles as Frank Gaylor and Frank Davey storm a show room, it will be a case of down comes the prizes.

Later when everything gets in running order, I will go up again by appointment, and put the screws on the two wise guys and squeeze out some practical information for the benefit of the common people.

TABASCO SAUCE.

"What to do with life members?" is the heading of an editorial in a poultry paper just out.

Send them the paper gratis and we will soon lose them as life members. Will resign in disgust.

"Get there Ely!" You're as big a lobster as Rankin. You might as well give up the ghost.

Robinson has no interest in the A. P. A. and never will have.

He puts me in mind of the Irishman who swore the horse was 17 feet high and on cross examination swore the horse was 17 hands high, and on being informed that he said the horse was 17 feet high, remarked: "Well, begob, if I said 17 feet I'll stick to it."

Robinson said the A. P. A. is this, that and the other thing and I see he is going to stick to it.

Howard in the Feather hits it right in that little editorial. Good boy, Georgie.

Dave Nichols is going to judge S. C. Br. Leghorns and Mr. Burgott is going to judge Cochin Bants. at the Universal Exposition of 1904 (should be 1903.) Do you grasp the idea?

Say, Drev., when you go to Hagerstown just tell my large strawberry friend that it will cost Nichols to have the Cochins judged properly—but then it will be no picayune judging.

Suppose Frank Gaylor is doing stunts with those White Wyandottes and Blk. Minorcas, getting them ready for St. Louey. Look out for side sprigs, Frank.

I notice in the daily papers that Major Genl. Theo Sternberg has been retired as an army officer.

Hope to goodness he will be in St. Louey. Talk about wind—Theo. has it O. K.

After several years of keeping his mouth shut suppose he will give us a good speech.

Say, you committee of 3, here is a chance to give a good entertainment.

Get Sternberg to tackle the question—the A. P. A. before and after.

I expect to be in St. Louey in time for the show. If you see one lobster you can bet your boots it's me.

If you see two it's me and Robby

If you see a whole lot of them, why it's the members of the A. P. A., with the chiefs, Orr & Orr.

Little Russel of western fame will be there. What a choice tit-bit he is.

And Rigg, too, will be there. Wonder if Boyer will be there. Better get my life insured, as Uncle Mike will give me the old scratch.

I understand that Bates has entered that man Foy against Carnegie, Helen Gould and the Salvation Army, under a special class, "Philanthropists."

Bets are even that Foy will win out easy. Say, George, didn't that article ever make you sea-sick.

These thoughts were never intended for publication. But one day Drevy saw them and offered me a 1st prize at St. Louey and a good pair of walking shoes fit for ties. (?) So I scribbled them down from time to time, for the same reason that a man leans over the rail of a ship on his first sea voyage. He is not interested in fish culture, and has no grudge against the ocean, but simply feels he has something he must give up. (Partially copied.)

Say, Drev., I want an apology from that duck in California.

Now, boys, don't forget Brother Cost. Send your birds and show yourself. It's the greatest card on the list.

My compliments to Patrick Henry Jacobs and my earnest prayer is that he will never grow old.

He hasn't for the last 30 years, to my knowledge.

Keep it bottled up, old man. Keep it strong till you want it. Then, and not till then, take the cork out.

Notice.—The American Association of Poultry societies will hold its first annual meeting at St. Louey Oct. 23, 1904. Delegates should send in their credentials not later than 12 right to the committee. For further information read the official organ. Societies who cannot afford to send a delegate can have their vote recorded by proxy. It is the intention of the association to change the constitution so a referendum vote can be taken. By order of J. H. R.

Now will you be good? I have started the thing agoing, so let everybody push, pull and shove.

Was just going to close when I saw an article in the Poultry Standard entitled "Why I breed R. C. Br. Leghorns." The writer says he always fancied them. Why of course! He would not breed them, if he did not.

He says it is sure death to young chicks to run where there is an old rotted woodpile.

In the Reliable, a short time ago, Artist Sewell says that is just the place to let them run.

Who's right?

Theo. Hewes has been engaged to judge (?) at Minneapolis.

WEST POINT.

SALTINES.

The most attractive exhibit in the Poultry Department, was the one of The Lathrop Manufacturing Co., of Rochester, N. Y., which was confined to their own portable buildings. The size was 12x30 and the ripidity with which the building was erected was wonderful. Within a few hours' time the building was up and the immense line of goods in place, and it was thrown open to the public for the inspection of the visitors. It was the most complete line of poultry and pet stock supplies in the world. A full line of Mr. Geo. L. Harding's, with his premium silver cups, was also within this building. The important feature of the exhibit was the portable buildings and fences. The buildings are divided into separate rooms, and can be used for summer cottages, automobile houses, as well as poultry houses. It was real comical to hear the people about the Poultry Building saying, "Ask Lathrop." This firm manufactures everything up to date for the poultry and pet stock keepers, and issues a complete catalogue fully illustrated, which will be mailed free for the askign. Send for it. They offer a 10 per cent. cash discount on all sales before December 1st.

Nothing succeeds like success, and to be successful in securing 5 firsts to his credit in the White Rock alley, Lewis Harrington of Cortland has a record he may well be proud of. The class throughout was very strong, which makes this all the more notable.

Cortland seems to be the home of White Rocks. A fine string was exhibited by G. D. Wilson, that hugged the winners very closely.

Young & Halsted, of Troy, N. Y., made a fine display of poultry feeds. The show was fed by this firm, and it was a notable fact that the birds looked fully as well the last day of the show as they did the first. This firm are also heavy dealers in bulbs and seeds, having a grand display in Floral Hall.

Although the Rhode Island class was small, Edgar L. Andrews of Candor, N. Y., showed three birds which would be hard to beat in any company.

We don't know whether it was a flag of truce or distress Judge Delano was flying Wednesday evening when he entered Hotel DeMar. Perhaps it was the new autumn style of negligee shirts. Some of the classes were hot enough to make any judge lose his shirt.

Talking about Pit Games, we had them at Syracuse. Only one exhibitor, but what birds! When you consider,however, that they were bred by A. N. Fay of Syracuse, it accounts for the fact that they were 28 of as fine specimens as we have ever seen.

The Sure Roup Remedy Co. of Rochester, N.Y., had a chance to prove that it was a sure remedy for this disease. Several bad cases were treated, which did not show the least sign of raup after being treated for 3 days.

Five firsts and one second is the record made by Arthur E. Pierce of Auburn in a good class of Buff Orpingtons. 1st pullet, also pullets in pen, were sweet ones, as good as we have ever seen so early in the season.

WEBB.

THE ST. LOUIS SHOW.

Editor American Fancier:

Mr. T. J. Bradley's reflections should silence ungentlemanly remarks relating to the committee chosen to manage this event. Legetimate criticism of men sometimes, and stock particularly, has a wholesome mission, but this committee is about criticism, and it is the duty of the poultry press, and exhibitors generally, to sustain and encourage, and carping is foolish.

There are sections of the live stock department which will not have any universal look, and it will be chiefly due to the absence of just such a working committee as that of the poultry section. Therefore it will be wise to show our appreciation of efforts on our behalf, and instead of allowing the committee to do as it announces, with any surplus, would it not be better for exhibitors to ask that it be accepted as a testimonial from them, for the services they have rendered to the fancy, and a meeting for this purpose at the show would be a gracious act, and a sufficient answer to criticisms, to which the thoughtless have subjected it.

I have made an entry of over 50 birds and my share of any surplus I wish to donate in this manner.

This reminds me that express charges will be an important item to those in this section, and though the committee will surely do what it can in this direction, by a combination of those who have entered, for railroad cars to and from the show. Cost will be lessened, and the birds can be provided for en route. Are there any exhibitors willing to join me, for this, and why not send a car from many centres? EDWIN N. MORRIS.

Sparkill, N. Y., Sept. 12, 1904.

The Story of a Poultry Farm.

Having written in a preceding article a short story without many details of my success on a practical hen farm from a start worse than nothing, I felt that to leave it thus, without explaining the ins and outs that were the causes of that success, would leave the first parts uninteresting and incomplete.

At the start I took my dictionary and a pair of scissors and cut out all the words such as fail, failure, non-success or any words that could be so defined, as they were the keynotes to the terms I heard most frequently to the accompaniment of poultry ventures, and believing that the poultry industry was as good and as legitimate a business as any other, I reasoned that to make it a success it must be run like a business.

Accordingly inventory was taken at start and a set of books opened of the proper and most approved methods.

Having observed that the most successful men in any business were the ones who made finance a success and a science, I determined that, no matter how well I fed, I should finance even better, and to-day while I cannot make my hens to average in eggs as well per year, nor grow chicks any better, if as good, as many of my acquaintances who have dropped by the wayside, I have established a practical hen farm, not only self-supporting but supporting yours truly and family without complaint, especially to be attributed to finance, not feed. Always believing in a profit in every branch of the business, I aimed to get it at the least cost, without being penny-wise or pound foolish.

Realizing the feed mill was the pumping station of the concern, I always take good care to keep financial oil on the machinery above everything else, (even advertising) or as an old friend advised, "Pay yer feed bills fust, an' they kain't bust yer."

"Therein is safety." It is said that economy is independence, and I believe it, for by tending right to my knitting and keeping an eye out for dropped stitches I have increased my plant in value as a bread winner and decreased the drudgery and disagreeable features to a large extent. At present the plant, stock and fixtures represent $2,100.00 invested and I surely can be pardoned for asking how could I better invest that amount to secure an independent living for myself and family.

In this game of finance on a hen farm I never allowed money to lie idle in stock or produce, turning into cash everything not paying good interest by producing, or in growth or development commensurate with cost of keep and maintainance of same, a point in finance which keeps "the ready" in one's jeans and holds one's credit and good name commercially. Cash is recognized the world over as the best kind of credit. In fact, it's the oil of gladness by which the world doth move. I soon found out that a steady flow of the aforesaid oil was needed and at certain seasons of the year egg yield was insufficient to keep things running smooth. So I regulated the produce, etc., according to seasons to keep up a steady and uniform income, as follows: From January to May market eggs are the mainstay: from May to September, surplus hens and broilers keep the pot boiling; from September to November, early roasters and eggs from early pullets fill the void; from November to January, prime spring chicks and ducklings buy our Thanksgiving turkey, and our Xmas presents.

Of course it's all right to know how to take care of your dollars when you get them and easy to write about selling produce, etc., but to get those ducats and sell the goods is another story in hen finance. Without the market or trade to buy, the foregoing is of no avail, while the general market is good, it's "the little bit off the top" that gives zest to the business. Figuring it out thus, I aimed at the start to gain trade that would buy the best produced, regardless of reasonable cost.

Therefore, I endeavored, and have succeeded in producing, market eggs and poultry of quality rather than quantity. As I've said before, my average egg yield per annum being low, but in quality above par, produced by feeding the best of grains, clean, wholesome meat foods, etc., with plenty of pure, fresh water, never feeding such foods that would un-naturally stimulate egg production, bringing these facts before the trade at once, which to them meant eggs and poultry produced from feeds as clean as food served on their own tables and with the fastidious, particular and willing-to-pay-for-it trade, these facts created the demand looked for. While success may depend on the man behind the hen, allow me to say the woman behind the kitchen range runs a close race for first honors, "thusly," by being able to prepare and make ready for the cream of the trade, eggs and dressed poultry, to know how to cook, bake, roast or broil, to suit the palates of epicures; in short, to test the produce in new and various ways before placing on the market, always giving the customers the benefit of knowledge gained in these tests, authority in such matters meaning to us another brick in the wall of success, by the above methods, both as to producing the goods and inducing the trade to try them, the demand over-runs the output. With every bit produced disposed of in our own town at top prices, so much for the philosophy of finance which, while important, is but one factor. "There are others."

Editor American Poultry Fancier:

Among the poultry exhibitions to be held this coming season there is one which will take place from the 17th to 20th of December in Ebling's Casino, 156th street, New York, and which is well worth mentioning.

This show is promoted by the (German-American) Association of Poultry and Pet Stock Breeders, combined with the New York, Bronx Canary Breeders' society, and will comprise all kinds of poultry, pigeons, canaries, hares, rabbits, cavies dogs and cats. It is the first one of its kind that has come to our knowledge as all the exhibitors, or at least the bulk of them, will be of German birth, descent or nationality. This exhibition is intended to show what they can do by themselves, and indications are that it will be a success indeed. The entry fees are very moderate and more cash prizes will be given than is usual at such shows. For the members of the association there is still another advantage, as they will get a reduction of the entry fees, as well as being admitted to the show free of charge, including the immediate members of their respective families.

The secretary of the association, Ad. Feige, in Rossville, Richmond county, S. I., N. Y., is ever willing to give all information desired and it would be well for those who intend to exhibit at that show, to communicate such intention to him, which by no means binds them to any obligation. A circular is being prepared which will be sent to all German-American breeders, who might be likely to avail themselves of this opportunity. The premium list is in preparation and will be sent out as soon as it is finished.

Yours truly,
AD. FEIGE, Secretary.

MISCELLANEOUS.

GEYER'S SCURVY CURE FOR POULTRY was the first article introduced to the public for this purpose, which has been thoroughly tested in the last ten years by many of our brother fanciers who are willing to say with us that there is no other article on the market like this that can be relied on to do its work properly. It is something that the poultry fancier, who appreciates his fine birds, needs very much. What looks more disgraceful than a fine flock of chickens, many, or all of them, having their legs coated with a thick, hard, scabby crust which is called scurvy? It spoils the appearance of the birds and is very annoying to them. It is also contagious. Here we have a sure cure for this ugly disease. By following the directions we guarantee that it will take off that ugly, hard coat and leave the legs clean and smooth and give them their natural color. It also has no equal for healing sores and frosted combs and wattels. It makes them very bright and red. It is just what the exhibitor wants to prepare his birds for the exhibition room. Some of our customers tell us that they have tried it with good results for weak legs. We only ask you to give it a trial. It is put up in tin boxes. Money must accompany all orders. Price, 25 cents. Address, G. A. Geyer, Florin, Pa. 560tf

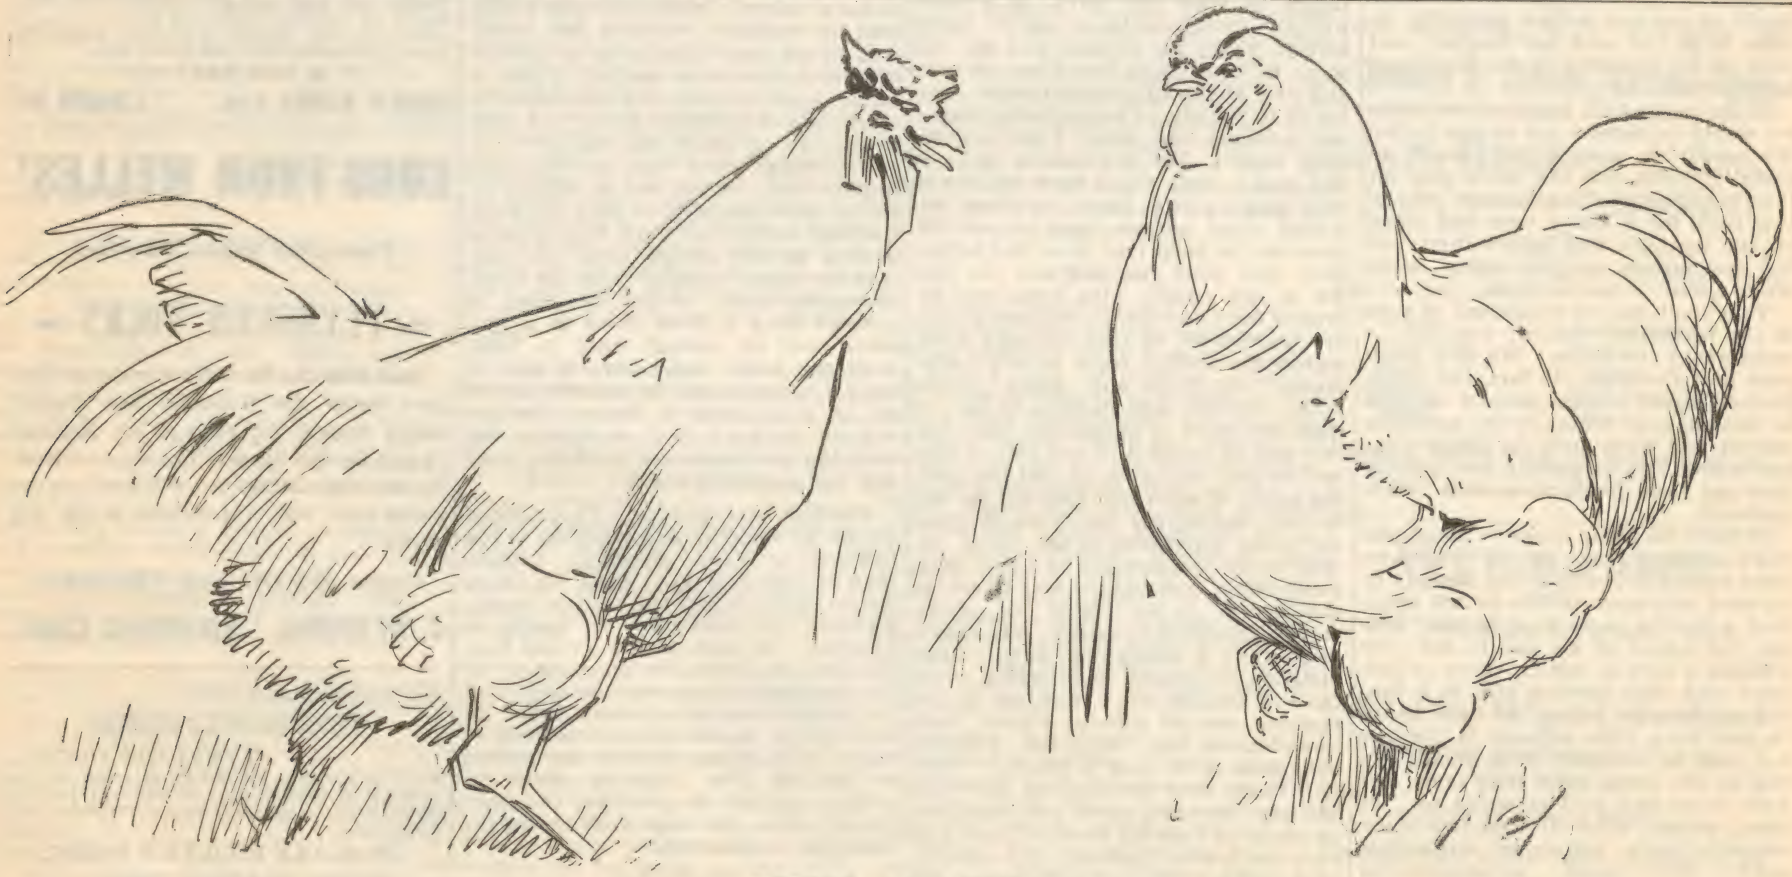
MOULTING

Timely Advice at a Critical Time.

Feathers, feathers, feathers. Wherever we turn we see them—in the houses, in the runs, in the dust places. We welcome them. We have the greatest pleasure in watching our birds becoming daily more ragged and more naked. The moulting season with us has not been an early one, and we believe that is the general complaint this year. We know, however, cases that are opposite.

At the beginning of the week we visited a yard where most of the old birds have nearly all new feathers. We have one such hen in our flock—an old cuckoo Dorking that we kept to rear a late brood. She is still with the chickens, but she has changed her dress, and there are not more than half a dozen old feathers on her. But she was a bad layer, and we fancy that accounts for it.

We know our good layers have just commenced—at least, they cast the first feathers about a week or so back. They have laid extra well this season, and that is, we imagine, why they are so late to moult. We do not despair, however, for these hot suns have a wonderful effect on the birds, and the moult is feathers everywhere.



Last year the moulting season was an earlier one. We had old birds "ready to show" in November. To have valuable show birds well over their moulting is a grand thing to accomplish, for the success depends on it to a great extent. It is not a very easy thing, somehow, to have highly-bred fowls well over their moulting, for many a good bird succumbs in inexperienced hands.

We have known people to buy valuable birds, exhibit them through the summer, and then expect them to come out as fresh as ever in the autumn, dressed only in fresh feathers. Alas! they are often disappointed, for the bird is perhaps three or four months perfecting its plumage, and when it is fully grown it looks patchy, or many of the feathers come discoloured, and the general effect is rough.

We are convinced that birds that have been exhibited much during the summer usually moult badly. They seem to lack strength to form new away. We have noticed time after time individual birds that have won in August and September have not been fit to show again till January.

The plan we generally adopt is, about the first or second week of August, to turn all of our hens together into a good orchard near where there is a house large enough to accommodate them, and there we leave them to moult naturally, feeding them well, but not giving them enough to make them sleepy or fat (we are here speaking of the large breeds of fowls) and allowing them a copious supply of clean water.

We do not pretend to recommend any particular feeding. This must be left to the discretion of the poultryman, as different birds and different strains have different peculiarities, and, consequently, here the poultryman must use his judgment; but we again state that the hens must be kept in good order, and allowed to become, to a certain extent, heavy, without approaching the possibility of being internally fat. With birds at liberty there is no need to give special food, as they will find all that they require; but if they be shut up they must have plenty of cooling food. We know none so good as lettuce, and if it has gone to seed and is stalky, so much the better. Sods of growing grass and plenty of fresh mould with them are also excellent.

BEFORE AND AFTER

One thing requires to be watched—the fowls will sometimes, in a disatisfied habit of body, begin to peck and eat each other's feathers. If a fowl do this it should be at once removed, as it will not only spoil the plumage of the others, but it will teach them the same habit. When a bare spot appears on a fowl, it should be rubbed with grease that is quite free from salt.

Sometimes a fowl will be seen while moulting to be continually picking or scratching a spot of its body. On examination it will be found that some feathers have failed in passing through the opening in the skin that is provided for the purpose. They keep on growing, but they grow under the skin, looking like a worm beneath it. This causes much pain. It is common in the topknot of Houdans and Polands. The remedy is a very easy one. Take a stout needle and pass it under the quill end of the covered feather, then draw the feather from under the skin.

When we find two or three hens are losing their feathers faster than the rest, and seem to be going in for a quick moult, then we take those away and place them in enclosed shady runs about six feet square, where there are not any draughts, and get them on as fast as possible for the early autumn. The floors of these pens we make four inches deep of clean sand, and cover the top with coarsely cut straw chaff.

We find generally that the birds which have to come to these little runs to be made ready for the early shows are those hens which have not been exhibited for some time, and which have been allowed to have broods of chickens. The remainder of the hens moult, as we said before, naturally in their large run, and are singled out later on for breeding or the show pen as required.

In the case of all light colored birds we would be careful not to use maize. We have seen many a bird ruined, especially cocks, for the show pen for the year through the excessive use of this food, for it has a very bad effect on the feathers, and makes them yellow and coarse, and in white birds often almost straw colored.

This much for our treatment of hens in the feathering season; now for a word about the cocks. We find small runs best for them—in fact, the large, feather-legged breeds should always be kept in such places in the moulting season, and when once the feathers begin to drop it is surprising how quickly they get their fresh ones when thus confined.

If there be many cocks to moult, and the number of these pens is limited, we have known large exhibition baskets to be used with success. We do not mean that a bird is to be kept in one during the whole of his moult, but by keeping a cock in one for three or four days, and then putting him in a run, taking the cock which has been living in that for a little sojourn in the basket, and so changing them about, seeing at the same time that they are kept clean and well attended to, we have, we say, thus often known many valuable birds belonging to people with very small accommodation brought successfully through the moult.

We feed the cocks on the same food as we do the hens—good sound ground and whole grain, with biscuitmeal occasionally; but we sometimes add a pinch of some condiment if the birds seem to be at all dull, and this often appears to give the new feathers a fresh start.

We would recommend those who want to put up a certain cock over a year old for breeding early January chickens, to let such a bird moult as naturally as possible, and not exhibit it till the required chickens are hatched. We are sure that cocks moulted in places heated artificially, or treated in any way contrary to Nature, or, again, cocks frequently exhibited in November and December, as soon as they have their new feathers, are very rarely the fathers of early chickens, for in runs where this has been the case we have repeatedly noticed batch after batch of clear eggs. It is consequently important to have the birds to be bred from well over their moult early, and then reserve them entirely for the breeding pen.

If hens have laid just before they begin to moult, it is often a good plan to let them sit on nests of china eggs, keeping them in good condition all the time. The old feathers seem to come off cleanly, and the new feathers sprout as thickly as possible. We have found, too, that a frequent application of sulphur ointment to the legs of the feather-legged varieties is often of great service during the moulting season, as it keeps the legs free from coarse scales and scurf disease, and seems to help the growth and development of the foot and leg feathers at the same time.—R. F. in Poultry, England.

THE STORY OF A POULTRY FARM.

By W. H. Card.

In my last article I wrote of Finance as almost the whole thing, but counting cash don't feed hens nor clean coops. Poor feed and careless attention means that there will be no cash to count, and finance would be like Mother Hubbard's dog. At the beginning I had to school myself to regularity and routine to do the same things on time 365 days in a year whether disagreeable or not, to have certain hours for feeding and do it then; to keep coops free from vermin and filth under all circumstances; to lug 18 to 20 pails of water daily, (some one wonders why didn't I put in running water? For the reason that a rich man's ideas won't work well on a poor man's pocket book), to clean at stated times and on time 10 or 12 brooders to keep free from red mites, body lice, head lice and any old lice 200 to 300 chicks with hens, to fix breaks here and there the minute they are discovered, to take the sick from among the well at once, to avoid contagion. All these and many more stunts similar, and hardest of all to train my mind to accept the fact that one pair of hands and one pair of feet had to bear the brunt of that everlasting grind of work and routine, but my success has proven the value of those particular attentions to the little details of the business, and as I look back I remember how hard it was to reconcile myself to my ideas of doing things according to system, etc., especially when I would see tumbledown methods seemingly succeeding with far less trouble and vexation. I remember one old German whose hens looked more like Egyptian vultures than hens with only a feather here and there, who fed nothing but corn the year through, and I told him that he ought to feed his hens different and stop the feather pulling. For answer, he would say, 'Oh, dot make me no different. Dey lay shust der same." And for a fact at that time they outlaid mine by 40 per cent per year; but the next year he lost them, one after the other dying till none were left, and so I persisted in my methods of care and cleanliness, till what was once a drudgery is now a pleasure and a profit; but I most keenly realize that one walks, as it were, on the edge of a precipice. Neglect for one season the lines along which came success, and over you go. The universal watchword of every up to date poultryman is "Eternal Vigilance."

TURKEYS.

By T. F. McGrew,

Kill nothing but well-fattened stock. It seldom pays to send ill-favored stock into market. Do not give any food to the turkeys for twenty-four hours prior to kill. This allows the crop and entrails to become empty and avoids much of the danger of spoiling. Full crops and entrails count against value; they often taint the meat and prevent its being kept for any length of time.

Methods of killing.—There are two methods of killing largely used. The most popular is to suspend the fowl by the shanks, head down, and cut or stick it in the roof of the mouth with a knife made especially for this purpose. This severs the arteries and cuts into the brain, causing insensibility and a free flow of blood from the mouth. This is called sticking in the mouth.

The other plan is to break the neck by a quick twist or jerk backward. When the neck is completely disjointed the head is pulled away so as to form an open space in the neck in which the blood may settle. This plan has been but little used, though the claim is made that when so killed the fowls will keep longer, because there is no opening by which the air can get into the body, as there is when they are stuck in the roof of the mouth. This method has been more used for chickens than for turkeys, and to use it well requires considerable practice.

The method of beheading with an ax or hatchet has been employed for ages.

DRESSING.

Dry-picking.—Dry-picking is always to be preferred when preparing the fowl for market. When in fine condition, nicely picked, and sent to market without having been packed in ice, a turkey is at its best, and consequently commands the highest price. As soon as the fowl is stuck and the blood is still flowing, pluck the feathers dry from its body taking care in doing this not to break the skin or tear the flesh. Nothing detracts so much from dressed poultry as torn places upon the carcass or shank; picking must be clean and nicely done. When the fowl is plucked hang it head down in a cool place until all animal heat is gone from the body, being careful not to hang it where it will be exposed to cold air as to be likely to freeze. Do not remove the head, feet, or entrails, but have the whole carcass, including head and feet, perfectly clean.

Scalding and picking.—The method known as scalding and plucking is too familiar to need comment further than to say that care must be taken not to scald or tear the skin or shank. Perform this operation as neatly as possible. As soon as the animal heat has left the body, the appearance of the dressed turkeys may be improved by submerging for a short time in cold water, as this has a tendency to make them plump whether dry picked or scalded. The plucking should be done as quickly as possible; the more quickly done, the more readily can the feathers be removed.

PACKING.

For shipping, pack as closely as possible into close boxes or barrels, nicely lined with white or manila paper; do not use brown, soiled, or printed paper. Have the package completely filled so as to prevent the poultry from shifting about in transit; do not use hay or straw for packing, as it marks or stains the fowls and detracts from their value. The above method can only be used when the poultry is sent to market without being packed in ice, and when this can be done with safety, either in refrigerator cars or for a short distance in cold weather, it is by far the best. The greater part, however, must be packed in ice. When necessary to do this, use nice clean barrels. Cover the bottom with broken ice; then put in a layer of poultry, then a layer of ice; continue thus till the barrel is packed solid and full. Always use perfectly clean ice for packing. Head the barrel tightly and mark its contents plainly on the head, and never ship mixed lots of poultry in the same package if it can be avoided.

PARASITES AND DISEASES.

No kind of young poultry is so susceptible to the effects of unfavorable conditions as young turkeys. They mst be carefully protected from attacks of parasites and from excessive heat and dampness until they have gained sufficient strength and size to wander away with the parent turkeys and care for themselves upon the range.

INSECT PARASITES.

The chief danger from lice and mite attacks to the poults is directly after the young are hatched. The plumage of the hen should be dusted with insect powder close down to the skin from head to hock joint, being careful not to get it into the eyes. This should be done at least twice a week until within two or three days before hatching. The most careful attention should be given to this. Never use lime or sulphur for this purpose. Nothing is better than Persian insect powder, but any good insect powder will answer the purpose if it does not contain ingredients that are injurious to the eyes.

If may often occur, however,that the hen will not have been properly treated, and so lice and mites will be found on the young; and, in order that the poults may live and thrive, they must be freed of these enemies. As soon as the young are ready to leave the nest they must be examined carefully for lice, which may be on top of the head, under the throat, or about the wings or vent. Some of them are gray in color and difficult to see. They may be destroyed by the use of sweet oil, rubbing a very small amount upon the head and throat; insect powder is sufficient for the other parts of the body. It is very important that only a small amount of the sweet oil be used, as too much is injurious. Kerosene should never be used to destroy parasites.

GAPES.

After external parasites, the most destructive ailment of young turqeys from certain small worms that are picked up by the young turkeys in places that have become infested with is the gapes.

Cause of the trouble.—This comes them. Some believe that the angleworm is the cause of the spreading of gapes, and it probably is one of the causes. It is possible for the angleworm or other worms to be infested by gapeworms, and thus, when eaten, to cause the gapes in young chickens and turkeys. Whenever the ground is infested with the gapeworm eggs they may readily infest all the angleworms in the same soil, and the eating of these may cause the infestation of the young poults.

Treatment.—Many remedies are recommended for this ailment, few of which have ever proven of much advantage. A feather or a twisted horse hair may be introduced into the windpipe for the removal of the gapeworms. Some recommend the feeding of finely chopped garlic and of turpentine in the mash, while others suggest the mixing of a teaspoonful of naphtha or benzine in enough mixed food for a dozen poults. The theory of the use of these remedies is that the fumes from the turpentine or the benzine will pass through the entire body and into the windpipe and destroy the gapeworm.

These remedies are known to have destroyed as well as to have cured, and great precaution must be observed in their administration; try them on a few at a time and do not risk the destruction of the whole flock. Another remedy is to place the ailing chicks in a box over which has been stretched some cheese cloth; take some very dry air-slaked lime and sift it down onto the poults or chicks through the cheese cloth! this fine dust will penetrate the nostrils and throat and cause a violent coughing and sneezing, which tends to dislodge the gapeworms and give relief. It is, however, a dangerous remedy which should be cautiously used rather as an experiment than as an absolute cure.

Prevention.—No saying could be more truly applied to this ailment than "a pound of prevention is worth a ton of cure," and cleanliness is the only sure preventive of gapes. Where the ground has become infested, a very thin coating of slaked lime should be scattered all over it early in the spring before the frost is out of the ground and allowed to lie there until the frost disappears, leaving the ground almost dry; then take a hoe and scrape off all the lime and one-half inch of the soil, cart it away, and bury it at least four feet under ground.

Another plan is to sprinkle the soil with water into which has been mixed some sulphuric acid; after twenty-four hours cover the surface with lime and turn the soil under with a plow. A surer and better way than this is to remove your poultry plant to an entirely new part of the farm where there is no danger of infection, then spread a coating of lime over the infested land and plow it under and cultivate it for a year or two.

Examinations made by opening the windpipes of dressed turkeys during the winter have frequently revealed the presence of two, three, or four gapeworms attached to the lining membrane of the windpipe; thus is shown the possibility of carrying the infection over in grown birds, which must likewise be provided against. The grown turkey might be carefully subjected to the lime-dust treatment as above, to produce coughing or sneezing, and some of the mucus may be taken from the throat with a fine platinum loop and examined under the microscope for worm eggs. Those showing evidence of the presence of the worms should be kept isolated and treated until they are known to be free of the worms.

BLACKHEAD.

In many localities turkey growing has become almost extinct as the result of the scourge known as blackhead. This disease was first noticed in New England, but quickly spread throughout the entire country.

Nature of the disease—It first attacks the cecum—the blind gut situated between the large and small intestines. It also attacks the liver,this organ becoming very much enlarged, often to twice its normal size, and showing over its surface discolored spots varying from one-eighth to two-thirds of an inch indiameter, shading in color from whitish lemon to dark yellow.

While this disease is attributed to microbes, it is thought to be very much aggravated or increased through inbreeding. In other words, many attribute the prevalence of what is known as blackhead to the depleted vitality of the stock of breeding turkeys, making it possible for the germs to grow and gain destructive foothold.

Symptoms.—Diarrhoea is the most marked and constant symptom, and may be expected sooner or later in the course of the disease; it results from inflammation and internal weakness. A peculiar discoloration of the head occurs when the disease is at its height, which has led to the popular designation of blackhead. This disease attacks very young turkeys and often lasts for several months before causing death. The fact that the propagation of this affection is more active during mid-summer has led to the belief that it is exclusively a summer disease.

Treatment.—The use of medicine has not proven very successful. Among the remedies most recommended are sulphur, sulphate of iron, quinine, and salicylic acid. Sulphur may be given, 5 to 10 grains being combined with 1 grain of sulphate of iron; or sulphur, 10 grains, sulphate of iron, 1 grain,and sulphate of quinine, 1 grain. It is necessary that such treatment be repeated two or three times a day and continued for considerable time to obtain results.

Some people who have had experience with this ailment in recent years believe that it results largely from inbreeding, the infection being transmitted from one flock to another by affected birds or eggs. The remedies applied proving of little benefit, the only alternative is the introduction of new, strong and healthy stock. Some have gone so far as to destroy their entire flocks, and, after having thoroughly disinfected the premises, started with new, healthy stock, while others have introduced wild blood into their flocks.

In all bowel troubles in turkeys, feeding boiled rice has proven of benefit, and it has been largely practiced by experienced growers. Many feed the boiled rice to the young poults to prevent the coming of the destructive diarrhea. The most successful way to obviate a dangerous looseness of the bowels is to avoid feeding wet or sloppy food and guard the young from taking cold. The feeding of small particles of charcoal is beneficial to the young from the fact that it sweetens the crop and gizzard and prevents fermentation, which is very injurious and destructive. Above all things, never make use of infected turkeys for breeding stock.

TAPEWORM.

Tapeworm and worms of all kinds are very injurious to turkeys.

Symptoms.—The presence of the tapeworm may be recognized through the indolent, drowsy spirits of those infested with it; a careful examination of the voidings will also reveal its presence, as those infested will pass small portions of the worm.

Treatment.—Powdered male fern is an effective remedy, and may be administered in doses of from 30 grains to 1 dram of the powder; or of the liquid extract, 15 to 30 drops. This should be administered morning and evening before feeding, the minimum dose to the younger, increasing the dose as they grow older. Oil of turpentine is an excellent remedy against worms of all kinds which inhabit the digestive organs of poultry. A common remedy made use of by some for the removal of worms from fowls is one drop of kerosene oil night and morning. This should not be admintered to the very young, but may be used with impunity after they are a few weeks old.

DIARRHEA.

Looseness of the bowels or diarrhea is quite too often mistaken for cholera; but such looseness may come from any of several causes, such as bad feeding, dampness, filth, or infestation with lice. The removal of the cause is the very best cure. Feeding boiled rice and a little charcoal, as already stated, will prove of great benefit. The remedy most often used is a mixture of equal parts of ground ginger, cinnamon, cloves and cayenne pepper. This is mixed into the mash food, about a stroked teaspoonful to a dozen very young poults. Double the amount after they are four or five weeks old. What is known as Sun cholera is very beneficial, either when mixed in the drinking water or the mash food. This may be given so that each would have from 5 to 20 drops at a time, according to age.

CHOLERA.

Cholera, when present in its true form, is a most uncompromising disease. The only thing that can be done to save a flock of turkeys attacked with true cholera is to remove all the ailing ones immediately and destroy them. Transfer those not attacked to some other part of the farm and thoroughly disinfect and clean up the locality where they have been, feeding nothing but a slight grain diet for a short time. Medical treatment has been of very little service in this ailment. The drugs that have been used are sulphur, copperas, capsicum, alcohol, and resin, either administered separately, or equal parts thoroughly mixed together and administered in the mash food.

Diarrhea and blackhead are often mistaken for cholera. If it is always remembered that the carcass, no matter from what cause the fowl may have died, should be either burned up or buried at least four feet underground, no infection to other fowls is likely to result. No other known cause of the spreading of the disease equals the permitting of dead bodies of infected fowls to lie about.

Turkeys, like poultry of all other kinds, are subject to the other diseases and ailments which affect fowls, most of which may be prevented or avoided if proper care and attention are given to the sanitary conditions and to the proper feeding of the stock.

The American Standard of Perfection places all recognized standard varieties on the same level. Why should secretaries and managers of poultry shows, large or small, depart from that broad and just rule?

Supt. John L. Cost of the big Hagerstown Show advises us that the entries are coming in fine shape and that the Poultry Congress, which will assemble there October 11 to 14, will be bigger than ever. The City Hotel will be headquarters for visiting fanciers, while the annual banquet will take place as usual at the Hotel Hamilton, Wednesday evening, October 12, after the big parade.

The program arranged for "poultry day" at St. Louis, October 28, appears in another column of this issue. It has the merit of being carefully selected and arranged, and indicates a desire on the part of the committee in charge to really entertain the assembled fanciers.

Mr. Henry Trafford, editor of Poultry Success, while on a business trip in this section, paid a pleasant call at the office of The American Fancier. He reports business as booming for his wide-awake paper.

Wanted: A Hamburg Club. The low quality of some of the Hamburgs exhibited at many of the smaller fall shows is a libel on one of the most magnificent and handsomest races of fowl extant. That judges are blind to this state of affairs is apparent by the many prizes awarded at smaller shows to birds that invariably get thrown out at the larger ones, by men who will not award premiums to inferior specimens. Some radical action should be taken in this matter, or the Hamburgs will fall by the wayside,as many other fine breeds have, when handled by the commercial spirit of the circuit grabber of county fair money.

Columbian Wyandottes are looming up quite strong. The quality of the birds exhibited at several of the leading fall shows was exceedingly fine. Approaching the best marked Light Brahmas quite closely in color of plumage, they show the distinct Wyandotte type. They should become very popular when better known.

Putting Andalusians in Class A at St. Louis and relegating Anconas to Class C at the same place is very amusing to those who know the breeding and practical qualities of both breeds. They should at least be placed on a level. The Anconas breed absolutely true; the Andalusians do not. Both are handsome and desirable varieties of the Mediterranean class, the Anconas being especially adapted for egg production on practical poultry farms. We have bred and handled both these varieties and while gladly seeing the Andalusians placed in the front rank, would like to see the Anconas share the honors with them as well as with the Minorcas.

The two D's, Maurice F. Delano of Millville, New Jersey, and William C. Denny of Rochester, N. Y., are travelling together as judges in these fine late summer and early autumn days. Starting at Cambridge, N. Y., as adjudicators, they met again at the New York State Fair in the same capacity and will wind up likewise at St. Louis next month. They are the Damon and Pythias of the age and the fancy.

Supt. of Poultry of New York State Fair, J. D. Jacquins is now a full fledged judge of poultry. He started at Plattsburg, N. Y., the week before last and judged the birds at Malone, N. Y., last week. "Jacq." should find plenty of engagements next season, for he has the ability and experience to judge.

Two of New England's greatest fall shows take place next week, viz: Brockton, Mass., and Danbury, Conn. Both are conducted on live, thorough and up-to-date principles, and consequently are appreciated by the best exhibitors in New England and elsewhere.

One of the great attractions at Hagerstown this month will be the big Homing Pigeon race. Birds from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington have been entered, and they include the cream of Homers in those sections.

Mr. Frank B. White of Chicago, Ill., has been appointed superintendent of the exhibit of incubators in operation at the World's Fair, St. Louis. This exhibit will be held October 21 to November 5 and as the time is short, it will require lively work on the part of Mr. White to secure a successful display. This department will be open to all incubator manufacturers, whether their machines are now on exhibition or not, and will also include exhibits of poultry supplies, feeding apparatus, etc. It is decided that the incubators be shown in operation. The above information was kindly sent to us by Mr. Dietz, secretary of White's Class Advertising Co. With a hustler like Mr. White in charge, the chances for a large exhibit are rosy. But why was this matter delayed so long? It is rather short notice to incubator concerns to prepare for a hatching fest at St. Louis.

The Pittsburg Fanciers' Club will send a strong delegation to St. Louis. Headed by the Hon. Mayor Hay of Pittsburg, with the Hon. Josephus Plutarch Hilldorfer, Dr. James Skiles, Deacon Edward Selden, President Washington Moore and Sergeant-at-Arms George Sutch and several others, the Smoky City fanciers will board a special car for Anheuser-Buschville, returning the same way to the city that made Carnegie famous. All the boys have made big entries, "Joe" Hilldorfer especially so, he being responsible for a string of twenty Black Minorcas and a goodly number of Buff Cochin Bantams. "Jimmy" Skiles has a big string of Pigeons entered, while "Ed." Selden will show a few birds "bred in the purple." As the special car is in charge of George Sutch, there will be no stops on the road.

The entry fees at the National Fanciers' and Breeders' Association Show to be held at Chicago, Ill., January 23 to 28, 1905, have been reduced to one dollar for single entries in Poultry and fifty cents for Pigeons. This change is made from the higher price charged last year for the reason that the management has been able to secure all the room needed in the Coliseum building.

Editor Atherton of the American Stockkeeper remarks: "The list of judges for the World's Fair looks very penny-wise. Of course there are a few exceptions, but it will cause some smiling. Now see here, Brer. Atherton; a disappointed feather adjudicator, who had signed the application for a judgship at St. Louis was indignant because he was not put on the, list because he told 'em down in that country that he would pay all of his own expenses if selected. At the same time, we desire to congratulate the American Stock-Keeper and especially its Kennel editor, Harry W. Lacy, on the stand it has taken in this judging business at St. Louis.

So there will be brand new coops at St. Louis. One of the committee of three informed us that no agreement with Spratts having been reached, special coops for the occasion will be built and they will probably be destroyed after the exhibition. Was not that one of the proposed schemes in the early part of the administration of the Com. of 3?

For a new duck, the Blue Swedish must have exerted a hypnotic influence to get in Class A at St. Louis, when the old, popular and valuable Muscovy is relegated to Class B. "Tommy, make more room for your aunty!"

The Wyandottes are on top at St. Louis. And why not? Study the whys and wherefores and you will see why. It's a case of Wy. or why all round.

Edgar L. Briggs made a big start in White Wyandottes and Pekin Ducks at the Poughkeepsie Show. When his new plant is completed he will be "in it" for keeps. The string he exhibited was full of quality, and took about everything in sight in the way of prizes.

Jonas Hayner had some really fine White Orpington chicks at Po'keepsie. They were beautifully shown and well grown, with plumage pure white. His Black Orpingtons were in as good shape and of as good quality as the Whites. These two varieties of Orpingtons are increasing in popularity as their value becomes better known.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

September 13-17.

The annual poultry exhibit at the Dutchess County Fair was superior to anything yet produced at that excel-lent exhibition. Superintendent Van Wyck can well feel proud of the class and number of birds exhibited. It is a well deserved tribute from the best exhibitors to the old veteran.

The only thing to mar the show was the fierce storm on Wednesday, which deluged the grounds and tore the big tent into shreds.

It is a pity that conditions are such that a large building cannot be erect-ed for the accommodation of the poul-try.

The cooping was in charge of Ma-jor Marshall Wemple of the Empire Cooping Company and was accom-plished in that expert's best form.

Many of the big strings at the State Fair repeated their winnings here, as will be seen by the list of awards be-low.

The Barred Rock class was a very warm and good one, notably first pen of old and young, first and second hen and first and second pullets, even bar-ring and good color predominating. White Rocks good classes; Buff Rocks very strong in quality of young birds.

White Wyandottes contained a fine lot of winners, while some exceeding-ly good Buffs were shown. Black Wy-andottes better than the average, first hen being a gem in shape. Some good Columbian Wyandottes attracted at-tention. Silvers and Goldens fairly good classes. Javas a strong lot in Black and Mottled. Rhode Island Reds strong in all classes.

Minorcas big classes, with plenty of quality in the winners. Hamburgs and Polish fine strings. Houdans very well represented, quality of some of the winners being him.

Of the rest of the show, Judge F. B. Zimmer writes:

"As usual we reported at Pough-keepsie Fair to judge poultry, but Providence put a stop to our working under the large tent on Wednesday at about 2 p. m., by darkness and a regu-lar deluge of rain. However, the two professors, Supt.Van Wyck and Marsh Wemple of the Empire Cooping Co., had provided as best they could for the comfort of the birds and inciden-tally the protection of the coops by covering all with rolls of tarred pa-per, which proved a wise move, as during Wednesday night the large tent collapsed and but for this wise provision the birds would have been drenched. Thursday a. m. brought us luck for once, as most of the classes allotted to us were in the poultry building and while Judges Drevenstedt and James Glasgow were rowing or floating up and down the aisles in the big tent we were on terra firma. While I think of it, if you are reserving or arranging any bouquets to toss at any of the new or young poultry judges,re-serve them until you see some of the honest, capable and conscientious work of "Jimmy" Glasgow. My word for it, he is "the right sort" and sure to come to the front. The business demands and needs more like him.

As to the classes we handled, would say that the strongest in numbers and quality as well were the Bantams, other than Game. The Game Bantams, Games, Buff Leghorns and Polish. Of the latter it is needless to say more than that Valdosta Farm and M. T. Burns were here with their grand strings, representing all the varieties, and some grand birds of each. Buff Leghorns were a large entry and some grand birds. The winning hen of an extra quality, although a trifle coarse in head gear, good size, fine shape and beautiful color. Cocks good, one that was unplaced the best of the lot, but for his comb, which had gone over too far from over-showing. A great bird, aside from this. The winning pullet a very catchy sort. 2nd pen of chicks about the cleanest, evenest, and most taking surface color we ever saw, but not so strong under-color as the winners, and we cannot approve of the appearance of the male bird's comb.

Large Games not a particularly large entry, but quality good. The win-ning Blk. Red cockerel looks now like a future wonder. Game Bants. large entries in nearly all the varieties,and some good ones all down the line, al-though some of them looked tired of the fairs and a few as though tired of life, while many were fresh and in trim. Bantams other than Game was a giant entry, and many beautiful birds were shown, particularly in Lt. and Dark Brahmas, many of the Co-chins, most noticeable the winning White, Black and Partridge Cochins, were fit for any company. Many of the Sebrights, both Gold and Silver, were fine, as were the Blk. and White Rose Combs, the winning Blk. cock a "'warm member," yet despite his many miles of travel. Quality came out in many of the Japs also. It was really a high class Bantam show and not often during a season do so many good ones meet.

TABASCO SAUCE.

American Fancier and Dear Friends:—I hope you will pardon my dropping you these few lines. I do so with a heavy heart. Mr. West Point is a very sick man. Has two doctors daily and they have pronounced the illness to be judge fever with a temperature of 109¾, pulse 140. The fever, the doctors say, will last until about the first week in November. Mr. West Point has sent the list of judges to the Lick Observatory to see if they can detect his name on the list, and in case they do not you must be prepared for the worst. This is a very cruel world, and I wish I had been stepped on when I was an egg. My husband talks in a very wild state—out of his mind most of the time, and all I can catch is Round About Robbey, A. P. A., Curtis, Sewell made all the sketches, etc. He also asked me to request Hewes not to duplicate the Indianapolis meeting at St. Louis, as it would grieve him very much, sitting on that great white throne next to St. Peter, to look down and see the boys scrapping. He told me to tell the boys that his last words will be "Peace on earth, good will toward men," and that if Mr. Roundabot Robby ever sent in an application to joint the A. P. A. he hoped the above mentioned man would be black-balled. Ah! me! but we were happy before my husband got "raising chickens," but it is all over with now. Sometimes he calls me a sweet, young pullet, and then after reading Robby's editorials he stamps around the house, and I try to calm him down, he calls me a cranky old hen. If things do not change before long I will go out to Dakota and apply for a divorce, as I cannot stand it much longer. He has bought chickens all over the country, with money that he ought to have spent for bread for the children, and entered them as if they were bred by himself. He is trying to win prizes, just like he won me, under false pretenses. But really I can't blame him. Col. Mills forced him to do it and so did I.

He says Sharp Butterfield will be happy judging St. Louis, as he will not have to use the score card to satisfy the society. He wishes Mr. Drevenstedt to inquire who is going to judge lobsters, and how big the class is. If he dies he wants to substitute in his place in the lobster class, Fred Crangle, formerly of Fisher's Island. He thinks Fred would have a good chance of being in the list of the "also rans." If Freddie cannot attend put in "Zim.;" he would make a pretty good one if the class is not too hot. In his will he has left his seat in the A. P. A. Exchange to A. F. Hunter, originally from Boston, formerly from Quincy, but now high boss at Syracuse. In "de pew" he will have some good sermons, but to find them one will have to be a good hunter. Not wishing to take up too much of your valuable space nor tiring your readers, I must close. Please keep this confidential.

With best wishes, yours, sincerely,

MRS. MATILDA WEST POINT.

JUDGES AT. ST. LOUIS.

It is very evident that the management of the poultry exhibit at St. Louis has been too much occupied with the artistic and aesthetic success of the undertaking to pay much attention to the practical side of the business. It would keep a score of Philadelphia lawyers and four X-ray outfits busy day and night for months, to fathom the wisdom and intricacies of this carnival of horse play.

Col. Mills sits in his regal chair clothed in his robes of state, his satellites grouped about him, kneeling attentive to catch every word he utters.

Expanding his chest with a deep breath he thunders forth: "Orr, proclaim to the ignorant chicken cranks that it is my will that every judge of poultry at St. Louis wear duck trousers and dye his whiskers green." "It shall be done, your highness," replies Orr meekly, and vanishes from the court to obey his orders.

Again the group is all attention as the name McGrew is called. (McGrew, who is scarcely taller than a child, stands on his tip-toes to appear as imposing as possible.) "McGrew, you will examine each judge selected for St. Louis and see if his physical condition is such as will enable him to stand forced marches, also ascertain if his grafting apparatus is in working order." "Your worthy mandates will be obeyed, most noble sire," and he too moves quickly toward the door. Such is the continuous vaudeville that is enacted daily in the court of the chief of live stock at St. Louis.

Their chief qualifiaction for appointment as judge, impeachable integrity, must have a new meaning in St. Louis, to judge by the result. Their second qualification is known ability of applicant to choose the correct winners. Is that ability learned through the wording of the application or otherwise? If otherwise, of what value is the application?

Applicants were advised that they should be ready to work for the honor of the thing, and that the management is conferring a favor by allowing them to fill out the bianks and then turning them down.

With four or possibly five exceptions, the judges selected are practically unknown outside the circle of their own homes, but of course this is the probable result of a determination not to allow "a flower to blush unseen and waste its sweetness on the desert air." If their psychological teachings enable them to connect ability with locality, then it would be wise for every embryo judge to move to a sparsely settled country and thereby be enabled to experiment at our international poultry exhibitions.

The National Bantam Association suggested several names for judge of Ornamental Bantams, but the men suggested were probably all dishonest or disqualified under the endurance clause, or possibly failed of appointment for the same reason that reduced cuts of standard fowls were to have been used to represent bantams in the new illustrated standard. However, this little consideration on the part of the management is highly appreciated, and a page in the book of minutes of the Nat. Bantam Assoc. will be set apart to commemorate the valuable concessions and favors granted by the St. Louis management.

Judges were not announced before the entries closed because it is a well known fact that all of our judges and exhibitors are dishonest, and if the list had been sent out earlier than Sept. 10th, there would have been such constant scheming and conniving between exhibitors and judges that the awards would have been in danger of being announced before the entries were made. General Orr's abil ity to reel off new and useless edicts reminds me of the story told about the recently hired custodian of one of Swift & Co.'s large meat refrigerators. Whenever he was asked as to what per cent. of each kind of meat was in the refrigerator, he always answered offhand without the least hesitation. This surprised the management and after investigation, they found that he was a rooter for the Chicago base-ball club and had been giving them the batting averages. The results of this carnival of horse-play are only too evident. A few of the most valuable can be briefly enumerated as follows:

a.—We have the secretary of the American Poultry Association dividing different varieties and breeds of poultry into classes as suits his fancy (or else gratifying the desires of his immediate followers). I marvel that he did not see fit to advocate three separate standards, instead of one, while serving on the standard revision committee, so eager does he seem to desire to impress upon the poultry fraternity that poultry, like Gaul, is divided into three parts.

b. The imputations of dishonesty of our judges and exhibitors by refusing to announce the list of judges before Sept. 10th, also a scheme to increase entries under the assurance of selecting well known and competent and honest judges. Then after the unsuspecting exhibitor has sent in his entries and money, the announcement is practically made that John Smith of Nowhere will perform his maiden experiment at an international exhibition at St. Louis in October.

c. Ignoring entirely the wishes of specialty clubs, that are doing more to improve poultry than all other causes combined—for the benefit of whose members this great exhibition is supposed to be held.

We have presented the spectacle of a few men like Hewes, Zimmer and Drevenstedt, who have stamina and the backbone sufficient to divorce themselves from and to repudiate the whole farce, (and there are others whose pseudo pedigree never came any nearer St. Louis than the home waste paper basket.) This is one of the few redeeming features which the succession of events has brought to light. In other words, " a few bright rays athwart the darkness.

e. And lastly, but not least, the ludicrous spectacle of the secretary of America's great poultry organization masquerading and attempting to conceal his words and clothe his acts under the name and shelter of the live stock chief, Col. Mills—who has never been more prominent in the poultry world than that he might have had a few birds for table use.

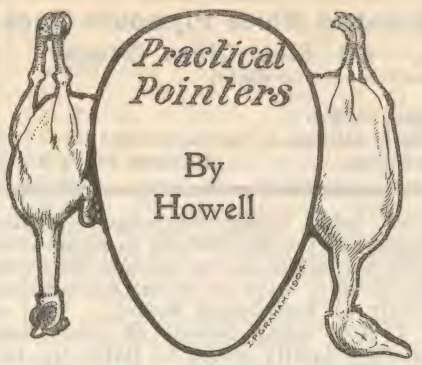
ADJOURNED A. P. A. MEETINGS.

"The American Poultry Association meets once a year to transact business and not to furnish advertising ammunition to the foxy gents that only join the old society for revenue. And one of the great wheels that revolve in just such a direction is the holding of adjourned meetings at some big fall shows. What for? The answer is obvious."—Editor Drevenstedt in American Fancier, June 25, 1904.



Two principal reasons or excuses that might be advanced for these now-popular adjourned meetings of the association are, first, the taking in of new members; second, the free advertising the association obtains in this manner. At each adjourned meeting held lately several new members have been voted in, especially annual members, as was the case at the adjourned meeting held in connection with the Indiana State Fair at Indianapolis last September.

We, too, have felt like protesting against the idea and practice of a portable American Poultry Association—one that may be carried around by the secretary-treasurer in his pocket, or be used by the promoters of various exhibitions as a "drawing card," but we have refrained from doing so, owing to our desperate fear that some one might think, or even go so far as to actually suggest, that the episode at Indianapolis a year ago is our real reason for protesting.

If it were right and proper to treat the association as a curiosity, then its use as a drawing card to swell the attendance of some fall fair or other worthy exhibition, might be in order. But the American Poultry Association was not organized, nor is it supported for that object, and it has impressed us as being beneath the dignity of an organization of this kind to "pass it around" and to dangerously hazard its reputation by this plan of adjourned meetings that is based largely on the homely but expressive saying, "You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours."—Reliable Poultry Journal.

LOST BIRD.

Mr. Edward Keating of Amsterdam, N. Y., received a strange Buff Plymouth Rock cock with his two hens, which were returned to him from the Poughkeepsie show, his own male bird not being among the lot. Anyone who has received this bird by mistake or who can give any information about the matter, will please write to Mr. Keating.

Mr. Howell, associate editor of The American Fancier, will furnish weekly reports on the egg and poultry market, and answer all questions submitted to him relating to commercial and practical poultry keeping. When replies are requested to be sent by letter, stamps must be enclosed and letters addressed to George E. Howell, 70 Christopher St., New York City.

Squabs, $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen, as to color.

The way to make poultry farming pay is an ability to have something to put on the market each week other than the regular egg shipments, a few pair of broilers in the early summer, and some nicely fattened roasters in the fall, an odd lot of fowls to be turned off, a pair of fancy breeders, etc., plan to catch the extra dollar. A steady income enables one to meet one's bills promptly and the prompt payer makes the more successful business man.

When placed side by side, the house with the raised floor seems to possess the more advantages, especially in colony houses. The two foot space under the floor furnishes a ready refuge for the stock both from their natural enemies, such as hawks, and also protection from the sun and rain. Equally important is the fact that there is no lurking place under the floor for rats. The only drawback is the openness of the floor during winter, but this can be counteracted by the double floor above spoken of, with a liberal covering of scratching material.

Too much of the aforesaid scratching material cannot be stored for the coming winter, and now is the time, road dust, dry sand, barn seed, the falling leaves chaff from the grain, etc. all will come in handy this coming winter, take my word for it.

Saw it demonstrated recently that a chicken weighing four pounds after its blood and feathers are removed, in the course of preparation for market, looses just 13½ per cent. under the butcher's knife before it is ready for the table; in other words, the customer pays for that much more than he gets.

M. E. PHELPS, - Brightwood Farm, - Laurel, Maryland.

It is a mighty good chicken that doesn't dress away more than 13½ per cent and well prepared for market before killing. That this was a good one, I can attest for it graced our Sunday dinner table. The white meat was on the breast an inch in thickness, and running back and covering the ribs.

I thought of our last spring's correspondent, Mr. Will Purdy, and his English fattening machines, and concluded he had nothing on that chicken.

What breeds? Buff Wyandotte, grown in the invigorating air of northern New York state.

This year's crop of youngsters by now, have reached a point where the breeder will be able to come pretty near telling if his matings for 1904 are a success or not. All a lottery, "like will produce like," says one. "Two matings for mine," says another, and a dozen other combinations may not produce a single bird good enough to win.

The two matings fellow is a sort of mixer. He blends the two shades of color as a painter does his paint, trusting to a combination of both to secure the desired amount of light or dark matter, as the case may be.

Now, if like produces like, the man that buys this pen for breeding purposes ought to have no trouble to breed winners but, no attention having been paid to reversion, he finds part of his flock of youngsters have followed the male and are too light, the rest have taken after the female and are too dark, while out of the running for this year, he can throw them both together next year with more than a fair chance of success

The single mating is simpler. and to my mind there are ample grounds on which the practitioner can hope for success. In the first place, pens which of themselves are perfectly colored, must and do stand as good a chance to reproduce themselves as where the dissimilar shades must be blended in order to accomplish the desired result.

WORLD'S FAIR IN 1910.

Editor American Fancier:—At a large and enthusiastic meeting held at Cranberryville, Caraway Co., N. Y., it was unanimously voted to hold a World's Fair at this place in 1910. Amos Brown was elected president and Reuben White secretary and treasurer. The Live Stock Department will be in competent hands. Owing to the fact that most of our poultry judges have booked their engagements several years ahead, we have mailed to about 599 Prospective applicants the following letter:

Dear Sir:—Your name has been mentioned as one of the leading judges of poultry in America. We beg to call your attention to the Exposition to be held in our city in 1910, and, conditions being satisfactory, should like to secure your services for the poultry show to be held in connection with it. As the cash premiums will be larger than any before offered at any Exposition in the world, the appropriation for judges must naturally be very small, but we have been assured that all judges of national reputation will be pleased to offer their services free of charge kindly fill out the following application blank:

1. State size, age, weight, waist measure, enclosing a late photograph, if possible. (The applicant is at liberty to add any favorable symptoms not mentioned above.)

2. State size of family and how many members would be liable to attend the Exposition in the event of your being appointed judge. (Applicants will be very careful in filling out this paragraph as our agents all over the country have strict instructions to verify all statements made).

3. How many outside of your immediate family would be liable to be influenced as regards their attendance at the Fair, by your appointment?

4. Give a record of your sales of exhibition stock during the last five years.

5. How many of your customers could be induced to exhibit in the event of your being appointed judge?

6. How many admission tickets could you guarantee to purchase during yor stay at our town?

7. State the amount of money you will be liable to spend at the Pike or Midway.

All judges will have to furnish security to the amount of $500.00 that they will not apply to the management for funds for the return trip.

While we are anxious to make this the grandest exhibition ever held, you will understand that it is strictly a business proposition and must be handled n a business way. All other conditions being equal, the most capable men will be appointed.

We are pleased to state that we have already received 257 very enthusiastic replies to the above circular letter and that we can guarantee to have a full line of judges and all ribbons placed before the end of the show.

Sec'y-Treasurer.

TURNING TOWARD WINTER.

The Egg Reporter states that during May, 1897, 293,277 cases of eggs came into New York city, and during May, 1904, 490,452 cases, almost twice as many as seven years ago. The price in 1897 was 10 to 12 cents per dozen, while in the present year they sold in May at from 17 to 19 cents. This same average and comparison will continue as long as the housewifeis able to prepare three or four eggs so quickly and easily for the breakfast of those who go to work early in our towns and cities. Some may perhaps be surprised to learn that the egg sandwich takes the place of a meat sandwich on many occasions. It is a delicacy that may be served hot, using two pieces of soft, hot toast and either mustard or dressing, as with meat. In localities largely Catholic, the egg, with fish, almost exclusively takes the place of a meat diet.

The advanced price of all meats enhances the value of poultry products. Four eggs are equal in food value to half a pound of meat, and to many, eggs are far more enticing for breakfast than meat, all of which will naturally increase the demand for eggs, adding to their value as a farm product and raising poultry to the prime position among live-stock, for the simple reason that they can be grown anywhere and everywhere. Little room is needed for their housing; they will consume all manner of grain products, and are daily cash producers, if properly cared for. With all these facts so fully established, every farmer should prepare for keeping poultry just as earnestly as he prepares for other kinds of live-stock.

The housing of poultry during winter is of first importance. This subject was treated fully in our issue of April 28 last. On p. 395 of that issue we showed drawings of houses that may be used either with glass or muslin windows; the plans will do for either kind. If these plans are followed, good housing will be provided. One must have a good, well-selected stock for producing eggs. A promiscuous lot of all kinds and ages will not do. Early-hatched pullets of the year and hens in their second winter are the only ones that may be fully depended on to pay their keep and a profit in fresh-laid eggs during winter.

INDIVIDUALS AND BREEDS.

Too much emphasis cannot be placed upon the importance of culling the flocks. It is quite as essential to cull out the non-productive, unprofitable hens as to be rid of the cows that cost more to keep than they give in return. Select always to keep the very best of all your pullets, also the best one-year-old hens. Sell all the poorest of the flock, young and old, and keep the best. Have them all of one kind or color, if possible. Do not keep a nondescript lot, without attention to size, age, color or quality. Have them all of one kind if possible. Divide the hens and pullets into separate flocks. If more than one variety is kept, place each by themselves if possible; also the pullets of each from the hens.

There are plenty of good reasons for all this, the most important being that both hens and pullets do better in separate flocks, as do different breeds also, if kept by themselves. Often such separation cannot be entirely carried out on the farm, but one kind only may be selected and kept to better advantage than three or four kinds; as for instance, the writer has heard this said: "My Brown Leghorns have laid well all winter, but the Brahmas in the very same pen did no good." This would very probably be the case, for the active Leghorns would get all the best of the food, while the slow-moving Brahmas would not get enough to keep them in laying condition. With these facts so well established, why not avail ourselves of them and gradually work into keeping only one kind, and that the best suited to our needs? If we have our separate houses and yards, as is the practice on poultry farms, then let it go on to the best advantage, but do not mix up different kinds where but one can be properly cared for.

The breed or variety to keep is of little importance beyond the question of personal preference and purpose. If all white-shelled eggs are desired for market, you must select for this; if brown-shelled eggs or market poultry and eggs combined, select for this, but remember that as soon as you mix the two in breeding, it will be but a short time before all will lay the dark-shelled eggs. The Asiatic influence, either direct or through any of our American varieties, darkens the color of shell whenever there is the slightest trace of their blood. But a short time since, we saw the statement that some Rose-Comb White Leghorns laid eggs with shaded-colored shells, some of them a light buff in color. This might naturally be, for we knew a three-quarter Rose-Comb Leghorn and one-quarter White Wyandotte to win the blue ribbon in the New York show as a Rose-Comb White Leghorn pullet.

The intermingling of these two rapidly increased the size of the Rose-Comb females, but at the same time it changed the color of the shell of the eggs laid by pullets having any trace of the Wyandotte blood in them. No harm beyond this was done, and otherwise the strain was improved. Do not hope to change your whole flock in a single year, but by having each year pure-bred males of the variety you prefer and no other, and as the result of care each year in the selection of your females, you will soon have culled out all but the ones most desired. Continue in this, and do not be led astray by the foolish notion of cross breeding.—Country Gentleman.

BLOOD DISEASES OF POULTRY.

Most of the blood diseases of poultry are hereditary, or at least they are intensified by constitutional conditions. pen or poultry-yard where this particular bird is being kept. The two principal blood diseases are tuberculosis and scrofulosis; but there are other blood diseases which show themselves, sometimes as roup, sometimes as eczema, or white comb, or even in dysentery, and similar troubles. For present purposes, however, we may omit these, excepting roup, after saying a few words about which we will consider tuberculosis and scrofulosis.

Roup may be said to be a blood disease, inasmuch as it is induced by an unhealthy condition of the blood, and is generally the result of overcrowding or cold and insanitary conditions. A vitiated atmosphere in the roosting place is the commonest of all causes of roup. A number of birds are closely boxed up at night, breathing each other's breath over and over again, with the result that the membrane of their nostrils becomes irritated, and then if the blood is not in a perfectly healthy condition, the probability is that catarrh will ensue, and subsequently easily develop into the severe complaint known as roup, which is highly contagious, and takes various forms. Whatever form it does take, it is bound to involve serious trouble and loss to the poultry-keeper, for it will be necessary to kill off the birds that are most seriously affected, while the rest will have to be dealt with at great trouble. Of course there will be considerable loss of profit, for birds will not lay when they have roup.

With regard to the two principal blood diseases mentioned, it may be pointed out that although they are nominally two distinct diseases, it would be more correct to describe them as different phases of one disease. Tuberculosis differs from scrofulosis, in that the former shows itself by internal symptoms, while the latter appears in various external forms. Tuberculosis will be found in the form of little tubers or globules, which gradually eat into the substance of the lungs and other organs, and it is not, as a rule, discovered until the victims have gone too far for any cure to be effected. This tuberculosis is really consumption—phthisis is the technical name for it—and it is a source of very great and considerable loss to poultry-keepers who do not understand and make provision against its ravages. Sometimes it is know as "going light," and is so called because the birds which it attacks gradually waste away until they become mere skeletons. The disease will be found (on opening the body of a bird that has wasted away in this fashion) to have completely eaten away the whole of the lungs, and usually to have attacked the heart as well. The best cure, or rather cures, are fresh air, change of food, and little capsules of cod-liver oil with quinine (which can be obtained from veterinary chemists) of suitable strength for poultry. One of these needs to be given three times a day. The best diet—which in any case should be limited—will be green food and a fair amount of oats. All starchy food, such as Indian corn and meals of various kinds, given in the form known as soft food, should be avoided, and the birds should be encouraged to work hard for their living by roaming over the fields.

Scrofulosis in contradistinction to the other, shows itself by external eruptions. A scrofulous bird is liable to develop chickenpox, comb disease, scaly leg, and other external troubles. If such a bird be killed, it will generally be found to be suffering from tuberculosis as well, and this must always be taken as a warning, because where one bird is suffering in that way among a flock, it is probable that a good many others have the ailment as well in a milder form. In that case it will, of course, be wise to take vigorous measures to prevent any farther development of the complaint. Scrofulosis, or scrofula, is known to affect certain breeds of poultry rather more than others; for instance, Indian Game, the old-fashioned black Spanish, Hamburghs, and the modern long-legged Game. It will be seen sometimes on their breast bones. These breeds having been closely inbred for show purposes, they always get more or less of this scrofulous disposition in their blood, for it is induced by in-breeding; and if one of them bruises its breast bone for instance against a perch or other obstacle, the probability is that a running sore will form there. We have often seen this among very valuable birds which are winning prizes at agricultural shows.—M., in Poultry, England.

LEST WE FORGET: THE GREAT HAGERSTOWN FAIR TAKES PLACE

OCT. 11-12-13-14, '04.

The poultry buildings are the largest in the United States.
The cash prizes are the most liberal offered.
A prize won at Hagerstown is equivalent to one received at New York, Boston, Chicago, or any other great winter show.
It takes good birds to win at Hagerstown for the competion is not local—it is national.
It is a fanciers' show from end to end, Visiting fanciers are "at home" at all times.
The annual parade and banquet are the great features that bring "the clans."
Honors won are bread winners. They sell the stock.
Seven men judge the show, viz: G. O. Brown, J. H Drevenstedt, D. A. Nichols, F. B. Zimmer, J. F. Craugle, Theodore Hewes and W. J Stanton.
These men have judged before.
Premium lists will be ready August 1st
The money you win is ready before you go.

If there is anything else you desire to know write to

GEYER'S SCURVY CURE FOR POULTRY was the first article introduced to the public for this purpose, which has been thoroughly tested in the last ten years by many of our brother fanciers who are willing to say with us that there is no other article on the market like this that can be relied on to do its work properly. It is something that the poultry fancier, who appreciates his fine birds, needs very much. What looks more disgraceful than a fine flock of chickens, many, or all of them, having their legs coated with a thick, hard, scabby crust which is called scurvy? It spoils the appearance of the birds and is very annoying to them. It is also contagious. Here we have a sure cure for this ugly disease. By following the directions we guarantee that it will take off that ugly, hard coat and leave the legs clean and smooth and give them their natural color. It also has no equal for healing sores and frosted combs and wattels. It makes them very bright and red. It is just what the exhibitor wants to prepare his birds for the exhibition room. Some of our customers tell us that they have tried it with good results for weak legs. We only ask you to give it a trial. It is put up in tin boxes. Money must accompany all orders. Price, 25 cents. Address, G. A. Geyer, Florin, Pa. 560tf

THE KENNEL.

WE'VE STARTED SEVERAL POULTRY FANCIERS as breeders of high class collies in a small way. They report very successful results, deriving both pleasure and profit from same. We breed both poultry and collies, (high class stock) and like them both, but of the two prefer the collies. Elegant puppies, bitches in whelp and other mature stock for sale nearly all the time. MONEY MADE

By Using Geyer's Champion Disinfectant & Vermin Destroyer

There are, in all classes of powders before the public, many calculated for the sure cure of lice and vermin and a dozen other purposes, yet are they reliable, and have they produced the results claimed?

In offering this compound, we offer a powder such as is not before the public, and fills a place that none other can for the purpose intended—a positive, sure disinfectant and destroyer of all vermin that invests either poultry, small animals, those of the barn yard.

It is a perfect destroyer of all disease germs, and produces a healthy odor wherever distributed. It is a sure cure for gapes, in young chicks.

If you are skeptical and don't believe in Powders or compouud because of many worthless ones on the market, we ask, please cast aside your prejudice and give this compound a trial. It is put up in 2 pound boxes. Price 25c. 560tf

TWELFTH ANNUAL SALE.

We will have our Twelfth Annual Sale for the month of NOVEMBER of the World Wide Known Egg Producer, BANNER EGG FOOD AND TONIC.

On account of the late Spring this year, there were less birds raised than ever before, so the demand for fresh laid eggs will be the greater.

To help supply this extra demand a little BANNER EGG FOOD AND TONIC in the morning mash will do the work. It starts the pullets laying early and keeps them laying all through the winter. It helps the old hens through moulting and gets them to laying before the very cold weather sets in.

Those who have used BANNER EGG FOOD AND TONIC once will never try anything else, as it does more than we say it will do.

The regular price is 1 lb., 25c; by mail 40c; or, 5 boxes, $1.00.

We will sell during the month of NOVEMBER only a 1 lb. box, 15c; by mail, 30c! or, 7 boxes $1.00, shipped via express or freight from New York.

This is a big saving to our customers, old and new, and those wishing to double their profits should take advantage of this special offer.

At these reduced prices, positively no orders filled before November 1st nor after November 30th.

We sell all kinds of POULTRY SUPPLIES and all are listed in our Immense Illustrated Poultry Supply Catalogue, mailed free. Send for one.

VOL. XXIII. NO. 579. JOHNSTOWN, NEW YORK, OCTOBER 8, 1904. PRICE FIVE CENTS

TRENTON, N. J.

A Model Fanciers' Show==Fine Birds===Great Attendance=Excellent Management.

The work that blue-eyed Walter Gladney, Jr., is doing at Trenton, New Jersey, in building up a model fall poultry show in connection with the great Inter-State Fair held there has not attracted the attention that it deserves. While "the boys" in New Jersey and Jennsylvania are familiar with the aims and ideals of Gladney, many others are not. It takes nerve to carry out a show on Gladney's plans.

But "Walter G." has the nerve and the push.

The handsome array of silver cups alone indicates the great interest taken in the Trenton show. The famous Ivory Soap cup for the best white bird in the show was a dream of beauty alone, but there were others as well that scored "up in the nineties." The Bantam cup brought out 185 entries—quite a showing!

But here is food for reflection and a few hints to show managers thrown in: Supt. Gladney advertised the fact that one thousand entries were the limit. There were 1,020 entries, the extra twenty being those of a large exhibitor who was furnished with twenty extra coops on hand, otherwise he would have been cut off. Eight hundred entries were refused and money returned.

Judging started at 9 a. m. Tuesday morning. Five and one-half hours after all awards were made, ribbons up and copy for printed catalog of awards in the hands of the printer. "This is coming some," as "Bill" Minich, the Carlisle Apollo, would say.

Only one bird in a coop, except in breeding pens, was the rule. While the buildings at Trenton are quite large and the coops roomy, it is the desire of all the fanciers that a larger building be provided, with new coops, so that all entries can be accepted and Trenton become the first great fall show of the United States.

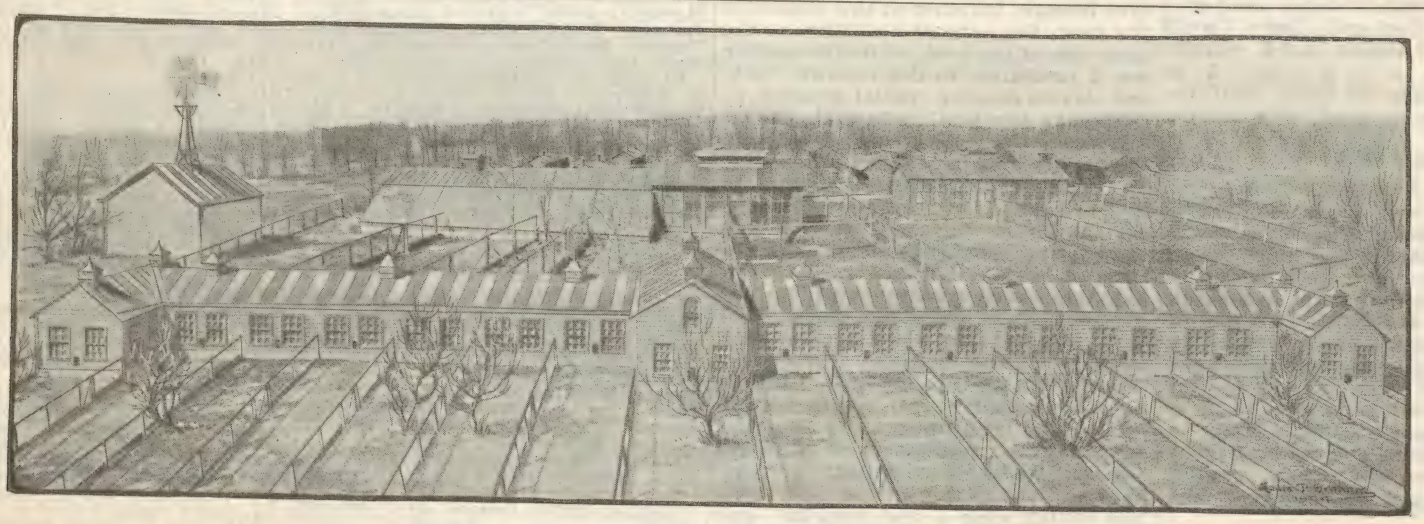
And why not?

The judges and the classes handled by them, were: T. F. McGrew, Barred Rocks and Asiatics; J. D. Nevius, Minorcas, Cochin and Japanese Bantams, Turkeys; M. F. Delano, Rhode Island Reds and Waterfowl; Fred Huyler, White Rocks and Sebright Bantams; F. H. Castner, Leghorns; J. H. Drevenstedt, Wyandottes, Buff Rocks, Polish Hamburgs, Games and Game Bantams; W. J. Stanton, Pigeons and pet stock.

Wyandottes were strongest in Whites. Cock birds, a fine class, although some of the old fellows were very much decoltee in attire. Hens, much better, the winner being a "star," having captured the blue the year before at the same place; second a very white plumaged bird and warm company. First cockerel a beauty in type and plumage, also winner of Ivory Soap special. Pullets, a nice lot, but most of them too green to be at their best. Buff Wyandottes came next and there were some very good ones, notably first cock and hen, both sound in color and good in type. Golden and Silver Wyandottes rather weak in numbers, but with several good ones in the lot. The Partridge Wyandotte cock that won first was the "class" of the lot. He is a fine one in color. The Black Wyandottes were the best bunch we have seen at one show, shape and plumage being considerably above the average.

Buff Rocks, quite strong, but old birds not in the best of feather and condition, otherwise some awards might have been changed. In cockerels and pullets the winners were well along in size, good top color, but there were a few late comers that will get there at winter shows. In pens, the first won on evenness of color all around, but second pen, with one bird removed, would have had the blue, provided the substitute was equal to the other three females. S. S. Hamburgs were a walk-over for Dr. Wolfe and the first cockerel and winner of special, is something the doctor can well be proud of. In hackle and saddle spangling he was the best youngster we have seen in a very long time.

The White Crested Black Polish were a rare treat, for they had the quality that tells, fine plumage and large crests.



Games few but good, but no competition to speak of.

Game Bantams fine classes, the Black Reds being very strong and competition red hot. First cock a very reachy, stylish, short-backed, well finished bird, with good top-color; second, fine in color, more cobby built; 3rd, very reachy, fine station, too red in color and pale in eye, otherwise a very catchy bird. First hen, a dream in style and color, one of the neatest, finest, sturdiest black reds we have ever seen. Won the special for the best Bantam in the show with several lengths to spare. Cockerels rather green, first showing high quality. Pullets very good. Golden Duckwings a fine lot, notably cock birds, all three being good ones. In Silver, first had an easy win.

Red Pyles, very warm and full of quality. First cock rather large, very reachy, good head and color; second in moult, more cobby in body, should win over first when in full feather. One of the best left out, owing to bad carriage of tail, being decidedly squirrel, otherwise the choice. First hen a beautiful bird in style, small and reachy nice color. Cockerels rather green, but promising; pullets, except winner, were not at Trenton. Rest of classes good, with little or no competition.

Rhode Island Reds were "way up" in quality, which can readily be seen by looking over the awards, such well known exhibitors as Fox and Shiebel being among the exhibitors.

Leghorns nice classes, many well-known winners being shown in the Browns and Whites, and some rare good new comers. Buff Leghorns a very fine lot.

The Light Brahma classes numbered 15 birds, of them first cock, hen, and pullet were quite above the average, balance only a fair lot. Most of them either too young to show or badly in moult. No Dark Brahmas shown. Sixteen Buff Cochins of good quality, first cock a fine large bird of good Cochin type, rather dark in color; hens and young stock very good. Fourteen Partridge Cochins of more than usual quality, the winning cocks and hens quite good enough for New York. The young stock promise well. Seven White Cochins of merit, the winning hen a marvel. As usual, Mr. Nevius won the lion's share in the Cochin classes on birds that fully warranted all they won.

Barred Plymouth Rocks numbered 56 in the open classes and fine pens, many of which would grace a winter show by their presence,Mr. Sherwood's winning pen and the first cockerel of Mr. Applegate were perhaps as good as have been shown this fall. First cock an all round good bird; second quite as good in all but shape, 3, 4 and 5 not finished in moult. The cock from Blue Barred Farm will be heard from later. The best hens in the class were too far in moult to show. The five winners an even lot of high quality. The entire cockerel class good in color and barring. The winner of first a gem, sold to Mr. Schiebel, the winner of second fine in all but tail section. Quite a few of the younger ones give promise of becoming winter winners. Among the pullets was a lot of youngsters that are too young to show, but of superb quality. All the winners full of quality, as were those in the pens.

Ten entries and one pen of Andalusians, the winning cockerel as good as shown in years. Hens and pullets all good. Cock birds in moult. The pen would do for St. Louis. Orpingtons and Houdans good in quality throughout. In Orpingtons were shown Single Comb Buff, Black and Jubilee, also Rose Comb Buff and Whites, the pen of Single Comb Buff the best of the lot.

Mr. Nevius writes: Black Minorcas, cock, a large, good colored bird, fine in type, good comb and lobe. Hen 1st an extra good one, especially fine in shape and head points; large good color and shape. Cockerels, large, well developed, fine shape, head points good 2nd losing to 1st in color; 3 a good bird. Pullets 1st large, well developed, fine shape, good color, comb. Ear lobes good, 2 and 3 not so well advanced but good ones.

Buff Cochin Bantams.—Cocks, 1st and special for best Cochin Bantam in show, a very choice bird, small grand shape, well feathered and good, even color but a trifle light; 2nd better color but not so good in shape and feathering; 3rd, 4th and 5th, nice birds. In Cochin Bantams as in large Cochins we find the fad of the past few years for light colors has been carried so far that we find most of the birds to be in color much nearer the lemon than a true Buff. Hens as a class only fairly good. Cockerels and pullets of good color, but best lacking in shape and feathering.

Blacks.—Cocks, 1st a very strong bird in shape, color and feathering, but too large; 2, 3 and 4 good in all points but size. Hens 1 and 2 good Cochin shape and feathering, color good, fair size, 3, 4 and 5 losing to 1st and 2nd in order of awards in color and feathering. Cockerels and pullets good classes but too young to show good shape or feathering.

Whites.—As a class not so strong in number or quality as are usually shown here and most of them shown in poor condition.

Partridge only 1 cock, hen, cockerel and pullet shown. We are sorry to note that but little improvement is being made in this variety in either size or color.

Japanese Black Tailed, but one pair shown, cock and hen very nice birds.

Whites, 1 cock and 2 hens, very fine ones the 1st hen one of the very best in size and shape we have ever seen. Winner of special for best Ornamental Bantam in the show.

White Polish Bantams, but 1 pair chicks shown. These were of very good quality. J. D. NEVIUS.

Of some of the other classes Mr. Huyler says: White Rocks brought out a very nice class for this time of the year. 7 cocks, the 1st a grand one, a little rough in plumage but will make a crackerjack a little later; 2nd a snow white bird, losing to first on size and breast; 3rd a large bird, shown in poor condition. 10 hens, 1st hen star of this variety, 2nd losing to 1st on tail and comb; 3rd, grand shape when in full plumage; will hustle the winter. Cockerels (6), 1st a snow white fellow and well matured; 2nd much younger, but has prospects of beating them all a little later. Pullet (4). 1st a gem, showing nice length on back; 2nd and 3rd well up. Pens (2), both far above the average for this time of the year.

Golden and Silver Sebrights brought out some grand birds. In Goldens, 1st cock, grand in shape and color; hard to beat. 1st hen, the gem of the variety and smallest we ever handled, showing good lacing in wing and tail, just through her moult; 2nd chasing 1st for her place, but shown in bad condition; 1st and 2nd cockerels well up to the requirements. 1st pullet, grand in color and shape; will be heard from later.

Silvers. 1st cock a little large, but in fine condition. 1st and 2nd hen above the average, with nice lacing; the same can be said of 1st and 2nd cockerel. 1st pullet a star, with grand lacing, with second showing finer laced, but loses to first on breast; 3rd not quite so well laced, but fine in shape.

PEN YAN, N. Y.

September 20-23 1904.

Every department of the Yates county fair was filled to overflowing, but the special feature was the poultry department, with about 2,500 entries. The quality all through was of an extra high order. Here the fanciers could feast their eyes on as choice a collection of thoroughbred poultry as was ever brought together at this season of the year, the general condition of the birds was of the best, while the quality was a revelation to the visitors. Several classes deserve special mention, in particular the S. C. White Leghorns. They were the largest class shown and the quality was far above the average. The winners may well feel proud of their ribbons, for they are the kind that have the right to win at any show. Seven-eighths of this entire class of over 100 birds were of extra fine exhibition quality. The Barred Plymouth Rock class was fairly filled with grand quality, the 1st prize cock and pullet being the gems of the class. There was a fine display of Buff Rocks, and these winners will be heard from later. The White Rocks and all of the Wyandotte classes were well filled and strong competition prevailed. The numbers and the quality of the Hamburgs and Polish were a real surprise and attracted much attention to these useful and beautiful breeds, while the display of Houdans was the best I have seen in some time. Rhode Island Reds, both single and rose combs, were out strong. These varieties are surely gaining in favor and improving in quality. Orpingtons were shown in good numbers and quality

Bantams were here galore. All varieties were represented and most of them with full classes. The quality was grand and the attention they attracted was well deserved. The display of Ducks, Geese and Turkeys was complete in every department and of a high order.

To Mr. John R. Lightfoot, the Superintendent of Poultry, credit is due for this grand and successful exhibition. His qualities are bound to win and he has the confidence of all the fanciers. As one exhibitor told the writer, "we know John and are with him every minute." The judging was done by W. C. Denny and H. P. Schwab.

Pure bred poultry has a strong hold with the fanciers and farmers of Yates county, and they have the goods that they need not fear to show in any company. It is now up to them to organize and to hold a winter show, with success assured. H. P. SCHWAB.

TABASCO SAUCE.

Well, well. I am able to do business again, thank you.

Close call—but good care and a strong constitution counts.

Came near having a relapse.

It happened this way. Matilda brought me up Sir Henry Trafford's chicken paper.

The shock I got was equal to many received regarding those judges.

About Hank's paper. Say, old man, you're a lobster.

Did you notice that beautiful white Wyandotte on the outside front cover by "Sis" Hopkins?

Was it a Single Combed R. I. Red painted white?

Say, old boy, for Heaven's sake don't fall asleep at the switch" any more.

Well, I got over the shock, but don't do it again.

A little advice I will now give.

"Be good. If you can't be good—be careful."

Just heard a toast about drinking. Will apply it to chickens.

Fake and the world fakes with you; swear off and you swear off alone.

Pretty near time for those 5 lobsters to have that picture book out, eh?

One time there was talk of having it for the World's Fair. How about it, boys?

It's a good thing it's not ready, as those sardines who are going to fix the awards would be all muddled.

I will predict St. Louis will have the best show ever held, and if there are any knockers, they had better be quiet.

Those 3 lobsters, com. of 3 Jr., have the nerve to say "Program for Am. Poultry Assn."

Poor old A. P. A. has to stomach everything.

Just received a card from one of my dear readers residing at Springfield, Mass.

Would like to say, my dear boy, you need not worry. That lobster you mention, he can handle himself beautifully.

Furthermore, he does not need to know how to learn to pull an Orr.

It does look as if there was some pulling done there, I'll admit.

The person you mention is not in that business.

Not even to Judge St. Louis. See!!!

You might do some good by taking care of Robby, your own state.

Robby seems to be sea-sick all the time, as he is always giving up something.

Who's going to do the cooping?

More monkey work, I suppose.

Ah! my dear Mr. Barnes of Michigan, you're a jewel!

That little squib about Tabasco Sauce in the Michigan Poultry Breeder made me feel real glad.

I am working Drev. for more pay,and a few of them will clinch the matter.

Say, Georgie,do you ever "fall asleep at the switch?" Wonder if you will be at St. Louey with fog-horn Wooden.

I notice Robby gave one right between the eyes concerning A. P. A. sketches.

Quoted Curtis, then gave him an upper cut.

Just the same, Mr. Farm-Poultry, you publish lots of cuts as ideal or nearly so, from these same lobsters that Curtis tries to belittle.

You have one in Oct. 1st issue, so don't think you have scored a run against the A. P. A. Not on your life.

We are not making a standard to suit yo, not by a ——— sight.

It's the real breeders we are after—not pencil pushers nor book worms.

"What's the use!" But have you studied that list of judges?

It seems very peculiar. I may have something to say later. But I can read between the lines. Don't be bamfoozled. WEST POINT.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1904.

Poultry at the Danbury Fair this week number over one thousand entries, birds being cooped singly. An up-to-date catalog of entries helps to make a model poultry show.

The illustration on our title page is a bird's eye view of Picturesque Poultry Farm, the property of Mr. James B. Breese, Trenton, N. J. The place is well-named, for it is indeed not only picturesque but exceedingly well adapted for poultry culture. It was built up many years ago by Mr. Breese's father, who, some twenty years ago, was a Light Brahma fancier. It is now exclusively devoted to the breeding of White Wyandottes under the capable management of S. H. Jackson. Later in the season we will give a more detailed description of the buildings and stock.

Theodore Hewes, editor of the Inland Poultry Journal, is the western judge engaged for New York Herald Square Show. There will be twenty-seven besides "big Theo." to place the ribbons.

Look out for New Jersey's big show at Newark next February. It will be held in the big exhibition hall of Bamberger's great department store, and no admission fees will be charged. Many other new features will be introduced.

About the happiest man at Trenton last week was Frank H. Hodges, proprietor of Columbia Poultry Farm, Red Bank, N. J. Besides scooping a bushel or more of blue ribbons, he won the cup for the best Bantam in the show, with the sweetest little Black Red hen seen in many moons.

Mr. M. F. Delano, president of the Millville Poultry Farm, has engaged a special car at Philadelphia, Pa., to take his fine team of birds to St. Louis. An attendant will travel with the birds and every comfort will be provided to make the trip a success.

Harry Fox and Jake Shiebel were very much in evidence at Trenton last week. They were dubbed the "Anthracite Twins," both being from Scranton, Pa. They entertained their friends and made life pleasant at Trenton for all.

We were glad to meet Mr. C. C. Sparks, the son of rare old Deacon Ivory Sparks, at Trenton. He is a newcomer in the ranks of the Buff Plymouth Rock fanciers, but has come to stay. His first exhibit was a fine one. Look out for that boy, for he is a fine, honorable and determined poultry fancier.

The "Only Bailey" looked after Spratts coops and exhibit, and was a very busy man at Trenton. There were no flaws in his work.

Dr. T. F. McGrew is going to St. Louis shortly, being one of the famous "Com. of 3." If the other two are as worried and anxious as Mr. McGrew, all will be well. The latter takes pride in his work and will give his best service to the fanciers and exhibitors at St. Louis.

The new Illustrated Standard will not be ready before 1905, consequently the latest revised edition of the old Standard will govern the judging at the coming winter shows.

Next week Hagerstown. It will wind up the great fall shows in the east and from all reports received, it will be a grand finale to a most successful season.

Lest we forget! Studying over the past meetings of the A. P. A. at Charleston, Buffalo, Cleveland, Indianapolis and Rochester, and anticipating the outcome at St. Louis and Minneapolis, the condition has been, and will be, favorable for the growth of annuals, while the perennials present an appearance of not having been watered enough. Case of dry rot, probably.

George Ewald of Cincinnati is the committee in charge of pigeons at St. Louis. George is big enough to handle the job, and should "fill the bill" to the satisfaction of the exhibitors.

Deacon Frank Heck, editor of the Successful Poultry Journal, not to be outdone by his rival brother, Dr. Geo. C Bates, of the American Poultry Journal, both located in the Windy City, has placed a stunning half-tone illustration of himself on one of the advertising pages of his really pleasant and progressive paper. Still we in the east believe Mr. John Haverhill Robinson's picture in Farm-Poultry is the largest.

The Hon. Patrick Henry Jacobs, editor of the Poultry News, remarks:

"The head of the Polish bird which ornaments the new standard might be taken for that of a Scotch terrier."

We can excuse our New Jersey brother in making this mistake. He is by nature gifted to adjudicate at dog shows, and in fact has made a reputation as a dog judge at Indianapolis years ago. The illustration he refers to is a very fine one and is really a good picture of well-bred Polish fowl.

We clip the following from Brother Jacobs' page in the September Poultry News:

"We Guess Not.—Dr. Little also maintained a pen of Gallus Bankiva, the original jungle fowl, and acknowledged forefather of all our domesticated races of fowls to-day.—Fancier's Journal.

"Come, now, Bro. Drew. Are you not mistaken, or is the Doctor a good advertiser. Authorities of zoology claim that Gallus Bankiva fowls have long ago become extinct."

We will start to correct our worthy brother by saying that the squib he clipped appeared in The American Fancier and not in the Fanciers' Journal, the latter paper not having been published in the last ten years; furthermore our name is not Drew, neither is Dr. Little a good advertiser; on the contrary he is a very good man and fancier, who has a hobby for rare birds, animals and plants, has travelled thousands of miles abroad and studied animal and plant life most thoroughly. He does not advertise because he sells not, simply enjoys the rara avis he keeps. He has the Jungle fowl and so has Homer Davenport, another fine lover of the rare and beautiful. If these two men that are an honor to the ranks of the lovers of thoroughbred fowls have been deceived in believing that they possess the simon-pure Jungle fowl, it is up to Prof. Jacobs to cite his authorities at once.

PIGEONS AT ST. LOUIS.

Editor American Fancier:

By the time this reaches your readers the extended time of entries will be closed for the St. Louis Show.

extended time of entries will be closed for the St. Louis Show.

As I have had many letters of inquiry regarding the care, cooping and reshipping of birds, I will try to be brief and give the desired information that no doubt all are seeking.

I regret that the opportunity has passed that should and would have given the West the greatest show ever held in the world, but circumstances over which we had no control made their appearance, so we must do the best we can now. We tried our best to have the very things that are now in use, viz: Single entries, and all should have been brought out in the first catalogue, and young birds to compete singly. This is all fixed as no doubt everyone knows, but we would like to have seen the superintendent appointed at least eight months ago, but could not do so, but things are now all that could be desired and a very good entry is booked. We wish to make it pleasant for all, and as I received the appointment some time ago to have full care of the entire cooping, receiving, care and re-shipping of all birds, and having been given full charge to hire sufficient and experienced help to look after all, I shall pledge my word of honor as a fancier that I shall do my best, and every one can rest assured their entries will be given full attention. If any fancier who has entries and can not be there in person himself, and has any instructions to give as to his birds and the return of the same, I shall be pleased to receive them, as I will have a competent clerk at my service, and I shall be pleased to do as stated. The birds will be under my control and supervision, and I will try and give all a fair and just attention. I wish to call the attention of all exhibitors to marking their boxes plainly by what express they wish same to be returned, so as to save confusion in the end. I trust all will comply with this request.

Committee in charge of Pigeon Dept.,

ORPINGTON SHAPE.

Editor American Fancier:

In a recent issue of The American Fancier I notice Mr. Howell's comments on a flock of Orpington chicks he had seen, in which he gives it as his opinion that this breed should be classed with the Brahmas and Langshans instead of with the American breeds.

Now, of course, it makes the Orpington fowl neither better nor worse to be classed with the Asiatics, nor can it gain anything from the Rocks and Wyandottes by association. But wherein a mature Orpington resembles the Brahma or Langshan fowl more than do the Rocks and Wyandottes, I am unable to detect.

The fact is, the cockerels of all the American breeds—if bred for standard weight—will, in shape, at from 3 to 5 months of age, show a striking resemblance to the Asiatic type. But as they develop, as their bodies grow broader and deeper, the similarity is lost. Besides there is this difference between the Orpingtons and the Asiatics: The former grow out of this transition stage in a much shorter time. In this respect, too, they have the advantage of both the Rocks and the Wyandottes. This is not my opinion alone. I have the testimony of a number of breeders to the same effect.

Too much cannot be said for the Rocks and Wyandottes; neither is it necessary nor good policy to belittle them in any way. They are grand breeds and any beginner taking them up will like them. But here are a few facts which it is well enough to state for the benefit of those who are undecided, and I think Mr. Howell's misapprehension in regard to type is one of them. IRVING CROCKER.

A DORKING FANCIER'S OPINION.

Editor American Fancier:

The American Fancier of the 24th was all right,—first page giving account of management of Toronto show, and the manner of judging, etc., was a lesseon it would be well for all associations to learn. Then the editorial page, seems to me put things in the right light, with Honest Henry Hale's letter for a clincher. It is better for an individual to do right, so much more the need of combination of individuals—an association—all the time.

INCUBATORS AT ST. LOUIS.

Editor American Fancier:

The universal Exposition is now ready to receive applications for space for exhibitions of incubators and brooders in operation, mechanical appliances for poultry purposes, poultry foods, remedies and supplies provided for in group 104, class 621. This exhibit will be made in connection with the Great Universal Exposition Poultry Show, October 25th to November 5th, 1904.

The entries for the Poultry and Pigeon Show already filed exceed any exhibition the world has ever known by about 4,000 birds, and the Exposition desires the exhibit of incubators, brooders, etc., to be complete and in keeping with the incomparable greatness and grandeur of the Universal Exposition in its entirety. This specially is true in the case of the Department of Live Stock which has set for the world a new standard far beyond anything ever realized in exhibition lines.

Exhibitors of methods and appliances pertaining to the poultry industry will please bear in mind.

First, That no charge will be made for space.

Second, That the exhibit will not be competitive.

Third, A competent judge will pass upon the thoroughness of the exhibit, indicating daily conditions.

Fourth, That the exhibit must be first class, suitably displayed and decorated up to the high standard of Exposition requirements.

Fifth, Applications for space must be in the hands of the Chief of the Department of Live Stock not later than October 10th, 1904.

Sixth, Incubators or brooders must be in readiness for operation not later than October 24th.

Seventh, Incubators must be in hatching condition or in process of incubation, and mechanical appliances in workng or workable condtion.

Eighth, The exhibition must continue through the poultry show period, October 24th to November 5th.

Ninth, All incubators on exhibition must be in operation all the time until hatches are taken off, and at least one hatch must be taken off by each exhibitor not later than October 27th, and some one or more incubators of each exhibit must have in them eggs in the course of incubation all the time.

Tenth. Brooders must have in them live chicks all the time after October 27th and throughout the Poultry Show, up to November 5th.

The Department of Live Stock intends to take care of each exhibitor and to simplify matters as much as possible to produce the best results. In writing observe carefully the following:

First, State the space in square feet required to properly provide for your exhibit.

Second, State just what your exhibit will consist of, whether incubators, brooders, appliances or poultry supplies, and the number or quantity of each.

Third, If incubators or brooders or both are to be exhibited, specify size, name and catalogue number.

Fourth, State how many persons will be required for the care of the exhibit.

Fifth, Send catalogue or printed matter describing articles to the Chief of Live Stock Department, and write fully.

The Department of Live Stock is pleased to announce the appointment of Mr. Frank B. White as superintendent of incubators, brooders, mechanical appliances for this purpose, poultry foods, remedies and supplies. Mr. White's years of experience in such matters, and his services in the organization and promotion of the Incubator Manufacturers' Association of America, qualifies him to efficiently and acceptably serve the exhibitors in these lines.

You are invited to give this matter your early attention and hearty co-operation, and to promptly file application for such space as you may desire.

Very truly yours,
CHARLES F. MILLS,
Chief of Department of Live Stock.
St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 1, 1904.

RUTLAND, VT.

Sept. 14-16.

Rutland had a pretty little show again this year. The exhibition was held in the Summer Theatre, a building 50 by 100 feet, and the arrangement and classification added greatly to the show, the birds being cooped in new Canfield coops. There were on exhibition about a thousand birds. The Cochin classes were a little light in numbers, although a few good birds were shown. In Plymouth Rocks the best birds were found in the Buff classes, while in Wyandottes there were but a few poor birds in the lot. The winning Buff cock Judge Rockenstyre pronounced a very nice, clean cut bird. Partridge Wyandottes were above the ordinary. There was a good class of R. I. Reds, and a large number of the best birds in Leghorn classes were found in the Buffs.

The Hamburgs seemed to be good birds throughout and the Frizzle, Rumpless and Silkey classes were much above the ordinary.

In the Bantam classes extra fine birds were shown in nearly every breed, the exhibit numbering over four hundred and the winning cock was the gem of the class in Black Reds. Duckwings were good throughout, while especially good birds were shown in both Red Pyles and White Game Bantams. Gold and Silver Sebright classes were well filled, with some very choice birds. Mr. Rockenstyre remarked: "Such a class of White Rose Combs was seldom seen at a fall show." The winning hen in White Booted Bantams seemed to be a little above the rest of the class. A number of good birds were found in the Cochin and Brahmas, also a good display of Japanese and Polish Bantams.

Turkeys, Ducks and Geese were few in numbers, but good in quality.

THE BROWN LEGHORN FEMALE.

It is quite unnecessary for me to repeat the old story about their wonderful laying qualities, as such is widely known. I will speak from an exhibition point of view.

Of all breeds of poultry, I think there is no class in which there is a greater variety of shades of color to be seen, than in Brown Leghorn females. There is also wide difference among judges as to the correct shade of brown. The Standard says, "a soft, even brown tint," but that term is of wide range. There are several shades that would answer to that description. But whatever the shade, evenness is essential. At the last New York show, I noticed on the back of some of the winning females, that so-called "washed out" or frosty edge appearance. The penciling was extremely fine and body color very bright, but that even effect was spoiled by the lighter edges of the feathers. These winners were also quite free from brick and shafting, and good in shape and head points, but like all earthly goods, they had their defects, and prominent they were, too. Their hackles were as much barred as striped and the color of shanks and feet was about as poor as the law would allow, being a combination of whitish and blackish and in some cases, yellowish. Notwithstanding the extent of the above mentioned defects, this very strain of females is considered (and I will not contradict) the best in the land. At a future date I will speak of their breeding value, as I have found by experiment.

What is above stated in regard to the demerits of a particular strain of birds, is as near correct as I am able to quote from memory of what I saw some eight months ago, and I may add the same is not far from precise.

All this criticism is for not other purpose than to inform and possibly instruct those who may be interested, but not able to see for themselves.

Now I like to see very fine penciling, on the back of a Brown Leghorn female, and I like to see it free from shafting, but I am not willing to sacrifice hackle striping in order to attain mire a well penciled wing, free from such to a phenomenal degree. I adbrick, but I do not like to exchange that beautiful light, clear salmon breast, for one of dark red mixed with black, in order to get it. Such birds of phenomenal sectional qualities, remind me of the smart mechanic, who is so often seen laboring under the sore weakness of an unquenchable taste for strong drink. So it is with things of earth. What we want is to see them good in all sections, in preference to seeing them fine in some and poor in other sections.

Yes, it's "the happy medium" we are after, the bird of well balanced qualities, and to mate in such a manner, as near as possible) as to improve in one section without sacrificing in another, or to better all sections as a whole, (slowly, yet surely) and to follow this plan will, I think, assure the most rapid advancement toward the coveted goal of perfection. S. L. TUTTLE.

A TRUE BANTAM STORY.

She was born in the summer of 1903. Her name was Gaston, which may have been partly responsible for the fact that the traits of her sex were never very strongly developed. At an early age she claimed many of the privileges of the human family who owned her. She would trip into the house and settle donw on any person's lap with the ease and sangfroid of the house cat. She would follow her little master all over the house and the patter of her feet could be heard up and downstairs. In the due course of events, true to her sex in this respect, she laid some eggs, and then decided to hatch them. The process was watched with the greatest of interest by the whole family. Unfortunately she had not been duly impressed by Theodore Roosevelt's outpourings on race suicide, for no sooner had the first chick left the shell, than her maternal cravings were satisfied. No amount of argument could induce her to finish the job. She immediately resumed her maiden habits, and while her little offspring was allowed to accompany her, the latter was obliged to adapt itself in every respect to its mother's caprices. Perched on a high roost, she would look down upon its unsuccessful attempts to join her with surprise and contempt. Nothing but a Game Bantam could have stood the racket, but assistance finally came from an unexpected quarter. A little hen was taken sick about this time, and was not able to fly on the roost, and from this day on she took charge of the little chicken at night, turning it over to its mother's care in the day-time. When the little nurse finally succumbed to disease another little hen took her place, and the kindly offices of the little foster-mothers helped to make this little straggler grow up into a normal chicken. Poor Gaston, who had learned to look upon all the world as her friend, eventually became the prey of some midnight marauder. Thus does civilization sometimes work for evil.
